If the civil rights groups have their way, the Federal Government's involvement, too, would deepen considerably. No longer would it rely on single-target legislation to crack racial barriers in voting, schools, public accommodations, public facilities, employment, housing and the like.

There are those who believe that, once pending proposals are enacted, the Federal Government will have reached the limit or productive activity in the anti-discrimination effort. "The time for civil rights legislation, that is civil rights on its face, is just about finished," declares a knowledgeable civil rights observer.

What may be developing is a more elaborate and sophisticated approach to civil rights problems. This is called metropolitan-wide planning, broad enough to cover entire cities and their environs, holding out the lure of Federal funds to induce money-short localities to not only eliminate discrimination but to actively promote racial integration.

At least that's the direction being signaled by the report prepared for adoption by this week's civil rights conference. Its major recommendations for action all rest on the foundation of metropolitan-wide planning—metropolitan job councils, and area-wide "workable programs" for housing and schooling. The conference's concept of metropolitan planning would require racial integration as a pre-condition to the allocation of Federal fund.

"This would have a much greater civil rights impact than much of that which now passes for civil rights legislation," predicts one who helped draft the recommendations

Demonstration Cities' Example

Some might argue that the Administration already has embraced this planning philosophy in its "demonstration cities program" to dole out bonus Federal funds to urban areas that plan comprehensively to eradicate slums and promote orderly suburban growth.

But even this proposal, though broader than anything in the past, is criticized by the White House conference as being too narrow both in geography and philosophy. A close look at this criticism provides revealing insight into the racial policy decision that the civil rights groups are now presenting to the President.

Among the "weaknesses" detected by the writers of the report is one of size. Although the demonstration cities idea proposes to select huge chunks of neighborhood blight for cure, the White House conference complains:

"It does not embrace the entire urban community. The central cities will be anxious to utilize every available dollar, but the suburbs are likely to go right on siphoning off the more affluent whites and excluding the less fortunate and the nonwhites."

Even more to the point, the conference criticizes the program for a lack of commitment to racial integration: "An overall city nondiscrimination policy will be suggested but will not be mandatory." The conference proposes strengthening the program by requiring that a demonstration city, to qualify for bonus funds, establish "affirmative desegregation procedures."

In sum, whether dealing with the central city or the suburbs, the White House conference document proclaims that the "elimination of the segregated pattern of residence from the American scene" should be made the "cornerstone of Federal housing policy."

And the vehicle for carrying out this policy would be the Federal Treasury. "Federal assistance to every local government unit," the conference recommends, "should be conditioned on the submission of a metropolitan-wide plan for the desegregation of housing and the promotion of communities inclusive of all races and incomes."

The pro-integration philosophy is not limited to housing, of course. The same theme shows up in the conference recommendations on school aid:

"The Federal Government should proclaim that it is national policy to reduce racial concentration in the schools—racial concentration of pupils, teachers and other school personnel. Present and future education grants should be contingent on the presentation and approval of an area-wide 'workable program' from the recipient community designed to achieve this goal."

None of this is yet Administration policy. It may never be. Certainly, in today's fiscal and political climate, there is a "pie-in-the-sky" quality to the White House conference's desires. But the civil rights delegates have fixed their sights not on today but on tomorrow. And the President did summon them to his door.

EV:

see attached carbon of letter which went out yesterday.
j.

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

14 June 1966

Dr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Dr. Via:

Please reference our letter of May 25, 1966 in which we transmitted to you a Government Transportation Request for your transportation to the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights".

We are asking your cooperation to assist us in completing the requirements necessary to meet the fiscal year closing of our books.

Will you kindly return the buff copy of the GTR, sign the enclosed voucher and on a separate piece of paper list your expenses (attach all receipts) from the time you left your residence until your return, so that we may process this voucher prior to a June 24 deadline we must meet.

We trust you understand the necessity for us to meet the legal requirements of the U. S. Government Travel Regulations and that you will comply with this request promptly.

Sincerely,

Arthur B. McCaw

ARTHUR B. McCAW
Budget Officer

STANDARD FORM NO. 1012
7 GAO 5300
1012-108

TRAVEL VOUCHER

DEPARTMENT, BUREAU, OR ESTABLISHMENT	VOUCHER NO.
PAYEE'S NAME	SCHEDULE NO.
MAILING ADDRESS	PAID BY OFFICIAL DUTY STATION / RESIDENCE

FOR TRAVEL AND OTHER EXPENSES		TRAVEL ADVANCE		CHECK NO.
FROM (DATE)	TO (DATE)	Outstanding	$
APPLICABLE TRAVEL AUTHORIZATION(S)		Amount to be applied		CASH PAYMENT RECEIVED: ---------- (Date)
NO.	DATE	Balance to remain outstanding	$	---------- (Signature of Payee)

TRANSPORTATION REQUESTS ISSUED

TRANSPORTATION REQUEST NUMBER	AGENT'S VALUATION OF TICKET	INITIALS OF CARRIER ISSUING TICKET	MODE, CLASS OF SERVICE, AND ACCOMMODATIONS*	DATE ISSUED	POINTS OF TRAVEL
					FROM—	TO—

 Certified correct. Payment or credit has not been received.

---------- (Date) ---------- (Signature of Payee)

AMOUNT CLAIMED → Dollars | Cts

APPROVED (Supervisory and other approvals when required)

DIFFERENCES:

NEXT PREVIOUS VOUCHER PAID UNDER SAME TRAVEL AUTHORITY

VOUCHER NO.	D.O. SYMBOL	DATE (MONTH-YEAR)

Total verified correct for charge to appropriation(s)

Certified correct and proper for payment:

Applied to travel advance (appropriation symbol)

---------- (Date) ---------- (Authorized Certifying Officer)

NET TO TRAVELER →

ACCOUNTING CLASSIFICATION

*Abbreviations for Pullman accommodations: MR, master room; DR, drawing room; CP, compartment; BR, bedroom; DSR, duplex single room; RM, roomette; DRM, duplex roomette; SOS, single occupancy section; LB, lower berth; UB, upper berth; LB-UB, lower and upper berth; S, seat.

 FRAUDULENT CLAIM—Falsification of an item in an expense account works a forfeiture of the claim (28 U.S.C. 2514) and may result in a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years or both (18 U.S.C. 287; id. 1001).

o48—16—78596-1

SCHEDULE OF EXPENSES AND AMOUNTS CLAIMED

PREVIOUS TEMPORARY DUTY (Complete these blocks only if in travel status immediately prior to period covered by this voucher and if administratively required)

DEPARTURE FROM OFFICIAL STATION (DATE)	(HOUR)	TEMPORARY DUTY STATION LAST DAY OF PRECEDING VOUCHER PERIOD (LOCATION)	(DATE OF ARRIVAL)

DATE 19----	NATURE OF EXPENSE	AUTHORIZED MILEAGE RATE ------ ¢		AMOUNT CLAIMED
		SPEEDOMETER READINGS	NO. OF MILES	MILEAGE	SUBSISTENCE	OTHER

June 13, 1966

Mr. Arthur B. McCaw
Budget Officer
The White House Conference
"To Fulfill These Rights"
1800 G Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. McCaw:

Enclosed is the buff copy of the travel request form for my most recent trip to Washington. I also incurred limousene and taxi expenses totaling $12.75 ($3.50, $2.00, $3.75, $3.50).

Will I be reimbursed for the $25.00 registration fee paid to the Conference?

I am sure that your end of the operation is still loaded with details to be cared for. Best wishes in getting them wrapped up.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb
Enclosure: Travel Request No. A-4,686,052

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G STREET, N. W. WASHINGTON, D. C.

POSTAGE AND FEES PAID

Mr. Arthur B. McCaw
Budget Officer
White House Conference on Civil Rights
1800 G Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

June 15, 1966

President Vivian W. Henderson
Clark College
Atlanta, Georgia 30324

Dear Viv:

Thanks for your note of Jane 13th regarding my participation on the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfase. Since so much of our work was done in haste and informally, I am sure that many of us on the Task Force feel hhat we never had an adequate opportunity to express our appreciation for the kind of leadership, imagination, and energy which you put into the whole undertaking as Chairman of the Task Force. It was a great service to us and to the cause.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director
Labor Program

EFV:jb

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

June 21, 1966

Dr. Emory Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Dr. Via:

The White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights" is now history, but the objectives of that Conference are yet to be achieved.

Those of us who worked closely with the making of the Conference, feel that just as we were dependent on your assistance prior to and during the Conference activities, that dependence will continue until the American dream of equal opportunity for all its citizens is a reality. Your excellent support and cooperative assistance played a definite role in making the Conference a success, and we are very grateful to you for your service.

With very best wishes and kind personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

Edward C. Sylvester, Jr.

Edward C. Sylvester, Jr.
Vice Chairman

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

ADMINISTRATIVE INFORMATION FOR CONSULTANTS

The purpose of this instruction is to advise consultants appointed to the staff of the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights" in the procedures to be followed and certain limitations in the use of government facilities and the obligation of government funds.

1. The Appointment of Consultants

Each individual, prior to being appointed a consultant, must submit two (2) copies of Civil Service Form 57. Caution should be exercised in the preparation of the Form 57 to insure that it is accurately completed in every detail. The Form 57 must be completed regardless of whether the consultant serves with or without compensation. Each consultant will receive a Civil Service Form 50 which will be the notice of appointment and the conditions of appointment.

2. Time and Attendance Reports and Payment for Services

Consultants serving with compensation are expected to inform this office, each week, of the dates and hours worked during the week on Conference activities. This time report is the basis for compensation, therefore prompt reporting is important. Consultants are paid on the basis of an eight (8) hour day or a fraction thereof, with payment for a minimum of one (1) hour for each day during which work is performed on Conference activities. In other words, if a consultant works one-half hour on Conference activities, he will be paid for one (1) hour of work. If he works three (3) hours, he will be paid 3/8 of his daily rate, etc. Any portion of an hour greater than one-half hour will be reported as an additional hour worked. If he works in excess of eight (8) hours during any calendar day, he will be paid for eight (8) hours of work. There will be approximately three (3) weeks from the time the first time report is submitted until the first payment for services will be received. Subsequent payments will be made each two weeks.

3. Travel

Travel on Conference activities for which reimbursement is expected will not be performed without prior approval of the Administrative Officer. Requests for approval may be submitted in writing or by FTS telephone (202-128-3691) to include the cities to be visited, the method of travel, length of visit in each city, number of days required to complete travel, and the purpose of the trip.

4. Means of Travel

The Government Travel Regulations prohibit the use of first-class accommodations, except under certain conditions, where reimbursement is expected. Air travel must be performed in less than first-class accommodations unless only first-class accommodations are available. Rail travel must be performed by coach unless overnight travel is required in which case first-class accommodations with a standard lower berth are authorized. Travel by privately owned automobile is authorized, with reimbursement at the rate of twelve (12) cents a mile, provided the cost does not exceed the amount equal to air economy fare.

5. Reimbursement for Travel Expenses

Upon approval of travel requests submitted to this office in advance of travel performed, this office will issue GSA Form 87, Official Travel Authorization which is the consultant's authority for reimbursement. If time and conditions will permit, a Government Transportation Request will be prepared by this office and furnished the consultant. After the consultant has signed in the appropriate place this form will be presented to the airline or railroad ticket office for issuance of necessary tickets. In the event it is impracticable to furnish a Transportation Request prior to travel, the consultant will purchase a ticket within the limitations of paragraph 4 above. After each trip is completed the consultant will furnish this office with a complete itinerary of travel, stubs or receipts for travel tickets issued (copy of Transportation Request, if used), copy of hotel bills and itemized list of other expenses such as taxi fares (each trip listed separately), baggage handling fees at airports or train stations and at hotels upon arrival and departure, local and long distance telephone calls and tips not to exceed 10% of cost of services. Upon receipt of this information, this office will prepare a travel voucher for the signature of the traveler. Reimbursement for travel is limited to $16.00 per day plus transportation, baggage handling and communication costs.

6. Long Distance Telephone Service

The Federal Telecommunications System (FTS) telephone lines will be used whenever possible to make long distance telephone calls. Long distance calls from a government or commercial telephone to a government telephone may be placed with the FTS operator in the city where the call originates. However, long distance calls from a commercial telephone to a commercial telephone cannot be placed over the FTS except in Washington, D. C. In Washington, D. C. the FTS operator may be reached by dialing 962-5021; in New York City the number is 460-0100; in Chicago the number is 828-4400. In most cities the number is listed in the city telephone directory under United States Government, Federal Telecommunications System. Also in Washington, D. C., if the call is placed from a government telephone the FTS operator may be reached by dialing 100. Inform the FTS operator that you are calling on "official Government business" of the White House Conference on Civil Rights and that the call should be charged to this office, account number T-124. To call this office from outside Washington, D. C. first dial your local FTS operator, inform the operator as above and state you are calling 202-128-3691. Calls placed from your home or private office telephone (except calls originating in Washington, D. C.) to a commercial telephone in another city should be charged to your home or private office telephone number. Upon receipt of the telephone bill, send a copy to this office identifying each call, the purpose of the call and total reimbursement requested. Long distance calls placed over strictly commercial facilities while in authorized travel status should be paid for at the time and reimbursement claimed on a travel voucher as authorized in paragraph 5 above.

7. Other Expenses

Request for reimbursement for taxi fare for travel performed on Conference activities when not in travel status (at your normal place of business) may be submitted on Standard Form 1164, Reimbursement for Expenditures on Official Business (copy attached).

8. Restrictions

Consultants are not authorized to make commitments which require expenditure of funds without the approval of a Vice-Chairman, Special Counsel or the Administrative Officer.

9. Office Address

All correspondence or telephone calls concerning the above instructions should be addressed to Norman J. McKenzie, Administrative Officer, White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights", Room 1121, 1800 G Street, N. W., Washington, D. C., or telephone 128-3691 (government line) or 382-3691 (commercial line).

Norman J. McKenzie
Administrative Officer

Attachment:
Standard Form 1164

PLANNING SESSION
for the
WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Washington Hilton Hotel
November 16-17-18, 1965

This agenda paper was prepared by the author to stimulate discussion of the work group. It does not represent any policy determination of the White House Conference, and is not a final statement of the issues. The agenda outline suggested by the author is a starting point for discussion and subject to consideration and revision by the work group participants themselves.

AGENDA PAPER #V
THE FAMILY: RESOURCES FOR CHANGE
Dr. Hylan Lewis

SUMMARY

This planning session has a concern for the influences on contemporary family life, especially family life among Negroes. It is assumed that the aims of the working session are to propose policies and programs for the immediate future as well as long-term directions and programs. The agenda paper refers to some of the issues and some of the facts having to do with:

1. The effects of low income on family life

2. Family composition among Negroes--its characteristics, factors influencing it, and its consequences

3. Plans and programs aimed at strengthening family life, especially among the low income population.

Among the issues: the nature and extent of family disorganization among Negroes, the reasons given for it, the outlook for it, and of course what to do about it.

The measures of family disorganization most frequently used are the incidence of families headed by females, illegitimacy, and the attributes and behavior of the disadvantaged male. The nature of the prognosis and programs proposed are heavily conditioned by whether the indications of "family breakdown" are seen primarily as a heritage of slavery or as responses to current conditions.

Among the facts:

> Over-all, two-thirds of Negro families include two parents. The increase in the proportion of female-headed households has been less than five percentage points in 15 years, with no rise in the last five years. The evidence is that Negro-white differences in family structure diminish when controlled for income and that differences by income are more striking than differences by color; that factors attributable to the effects of inequities in housing, employment, health, and education account for a large amount of the difference between the figures for Negroes and whites.

The family and family behavior among Negroes show great range and variability; especially overlooked and underrated is the diversity among low income Negro families. When these are overlooked for any reason, there is danger that the depreciated, and probably more dramatic and threatening, characteristics of a small segment of the population may be imputed to an entire population.

Family and personal strengths, resiliencies and demonstrated capacities for change found at all levels are a prime resource to be taken into account in planning programs aimed at strengthening family life among Negroes.

QUESTIONS

1. What are the goals for all families?

   Are there special goals for different categories of families? --e.g., Negro families? Negro low-income families? Negro families in urban ghettos? urban problem families? rural problem families?

2. What is the most important single thing that needs to be done now to improve the quality of family life generally? For low-income families?

3. What should be the general objective with regard to low-income Negro families:

   (a) to propose a model to which all families should conform?

   (b) to offer the kinds of economic and social supports that seem best suited to allow families to work out their own forms and functions?

4. Among the Federal Government's efforts to strengthen the family which programs seem to be moving effectively in needed directions --i.e., programs such as the following:

   Aid to Families of Dependent Children public housing, and other Federal aid to housing day care

   vocational training and rehabilitation employment counseling and services training and use of non-professional aids family counseling and education medical and survivors' insurance

   foster family and group family care social and protective services for children

   Federal aids to education

5. What features in such programs require modification?

6. What innovations are required in current programs if they are to achieve their objectives of helping to strengthen family life?

7. Are the more adequate economic resources needed by low-income families to be supplied solely by improving the employment opportunities of family breadwinners? If so, how? If not, how?

8. What about non-job sources of family income--e.g., the family allowance? the negative income tax? the guaranteed annual income?

9. Assuming that children can be helped more effectively if their parents are involved, and that so far few major successes that stand up to scrutiny have been achieved in this direction, how shall effective involvement be accomplished?

   And, if some parents are unreached, or unwilling to be involved, what should our approach be with reference to the child?

10. Are surrogate male models desirable and feasible for boys and girls without fathers? If so, what kind and how introduced?

    Do any of the current programs--Big Brothers, neighborhood counselors, more male teachers, adult or near-adult aides in nursery schools and day care centers--offer promising leads?

11. Should day care centers offer, not only custodial care and opportunities for socialization, but also cognitive enrichment to enhance school readiness?

    What about such questions as: Is cognitive enrichment being sought at the expense of social and emotional development?

    Is nursery school cooperativeness cultivated at the expense of independence and coping abilities?

    Are the intellectual gains reported after preschool training likely to be stable? Or are they to be threatened by unfortunate school experiences later--overcrowded classes, with split shifts, inadequate teachers?

12. How translate into social policy and action the evidence that low-income Negro parents have high educational aspirations for their children?

13. In administering large programs aimed at eliminating the effects of poverty and discrimination on families, what principles of administration should be followed, and how can this be accomplished?

    For example, what are the relative advantages and disadvantages of Federal vs. local direction?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Contemporary Family Forms

The Father--Present and Absent

The Present Mother

Children and Daytime Care

Births Out of Wedlock

Child Rearing Practices

Some Familiar Generalizations

PLANNING SESSION
for the
WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Washington Hilton Hotel
November 16-17-18, 1965

This agenda paper was prepared by the author to stimulate discussion of the work group. It does not represent any policy determination of the White House Conference, and is not a final statement of the issues. The agenda outline suggested by the author is a starting point for discussion and subject to consideration and revision by the work group participants themselves.

AGENDA PAPER #V
THE FAMILY: RESOURCES FOR CHANGE
Dr. Hylan Lewis

> ...the family is rooted in human nature -- in human nature conceived not as a bundle of instincts but as a product of social life;...the family may take protean forms as it survives or is reborn in times of cataclysmic social change; and...we can predict with some assurance the persistence of the family but not the specific forms which it may take in the future.1/

The viability of families, especially low-income families, is critically relevant to our national design and commitment "to fulfill these rights." The purpose of this agenda paper is to serve the working group's examination of stresses and potentials for contemporary families. The discussion is cued to "outside" as well as "inside," and to contemporary as well as historical, factors affecting the course and quality of family life, particularly among low-income Negroes. The aim is to focus attention on the policy and program implications of current family facts and issues. The agenda paper has been prepared with these goals of the planning session in mind:

(1) the proposal of directions and long-term programs that seem most promising for eliminating or reducing the factors that make for family stress and instability, and for maximizing the realization of family potentials

(2) the proposal of some specific programs, services or activities to be accomplished within a stated time.

It is through the family that the individual enters into the privileges and liabilities bestowed upon him as a citizen. And it is through the family that the effects of his citizen status first impinge on his inner circle and his inner self. The family acts, not merely as conduit, but rather as agent, reagent and catalyst. It defines the child's world for him; and it, initially, defines him to himself.

The functions of the family are discussed chiefly in terms of what it does for children, and the emphasis is accurate. Yet the viability of the family depends on the satisfactions and supports it offers to adults, since it is they who determine whether a family unit survives or dissolves. Moreover, what the family can offer to its children depends on the psychological, social, physical and economic status of the adults who preside over it.

It is often claimed that the United States is a child-centered country and, like most claims, this one is occasionally challenged. If we were child-centered, ask the challengers, would we be spending on education only a fraction of what we spend for defense? Would our most family-labeled program, Aid to Families of Dependent Children, have focused for so many years on the sex morality and employability of the mother, with so little official regard for the care of children while the mother works?

I. Contemporary Family Forms

A major issue in any discussion of the Negro family is the higher proportion of female-headed households among Negroes compared with whites.2/ The genesis of such families is, by some, attributed to slavery. Others reject or place little emphasis on slavery as an explanation, as compared with current conditions. For example, it has been suggested that

> ...not enough is known about...present family forms and functions and about the behavior patterns which are distinctly urban products with a dynamic and history of their own. The forms, as in the case of the family headed by the female, may be the same but the context in which they fit and function has probably changed in important details.3/

In one sense, the disagreement about the influence of the slavery heritage on current family forms and practices appears largely academic. We are dealing with the problems and potentials of today, as they are manifested today. Although historical influences may affect kind and degree of potential for growth, it is not necessary to agree on underlying causes in order to perceive present problems and build upon present potentials.

In another sense, the controversy is not academic, for it colors opinions about the nature and extent of differences and similarities between Negro and white families at very low income levels. Those who emphasize the historical influence point to differences; those who emphasize post-slavery influences point to similarities between the two.

The habit of analyzing data by color rather than by income level has tended to support the slavery-specific hypothesis. Since a much larger proportion of Negroes than of whites are on the lowest income levels, what look like statistically significant differences between Negroes and whites may actually be differences between socio-economic levels. But if the figures are presented only in one way, the other possibility is obscured. Studies of prenatal care, for example, indicate that in effect one is comparing the prosperous with the poor in all three of the following comparisons: white mothers with nonwhite mothers; married mothers with unmarried mothers; all mothers who do with all mothers who do not obtain prenatal care.4/

2 OUT OF 5 NONWHITE FAMILIES HAD INCOMES BELOW $3,000 IN 1964.

SOURCE: U.S. BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

The Lefcowitz paper compares a variety of qualities for Negroes and whites who are poor and for Negroes and whites who are not poor.5/ In effect, Negro and white comparisons are made after a rough standardization for income. These data suggest that:

1. When controlled for income, Negro-white differences in family structure diminish. Differences by income are more striking than differences by color.

2. When Negro and white children with similar incomes are compared, differences between them in educational achievement diminish and the differences by class appear more striking than the differences by color.

3. There is far more difference in employment status by income than by color.

4. The relative position of men with respect to women, economically and educationally, is the same for whites as for non-whites.

In short, some differences diminish and others disappear. On the other hand, even within income classes, some striking differences remain, differences that may be attributed to two qualities. First, a time-consuming, sophisticated analysis may be required to discern what quality that overlaps with ethnic status is operating. For example, the number of children born per 1,000 mothers is greater for Negroes than for whites. However, the migration pattern of Negroes is different from whites and rural background, like income level, appears to be a powerful factor affecting fertility. If one could standardize white-Negro fertility figures for rural background and for income, would a difference continue to appear?

A second quality that creates difference between Negroes and whites is, obviously, the impact of discriminatory treatment. If the rate of home ownership is higher for whites than for Negroes, even within income classes, can there be any doubt that discrimination by real estate and financing firms is responsible? As another example, the mortality rate of young Negro men exceeds that of white men.* Obviously, this increases the incidence of Negro broken families.

---

* At ages 25-30, 7 per 1,000 white males and 16 per 1,000 Negro males are likely to die. These figures are not adjusted for income. White young women can marry-up into a comparatively large pool of non-poor white young men. The relative opportunity for Negro young women has been much smaller.

We may come to three general conclusions:

1. Plainly, and overlooking the fact that most Negroes are poor, there are more female-headed families among Negroes than among whites.

2. Poverty accounts for a large measure of this difference. If the qualities of poverty were removed from statistical comparisons, figures for Negroes would move much closer to those for whites.

3. Locatable factors emerging in general from discrimination--health, housing, employment, and so forth--account for a large measure of the difference between figures for Negroes and for whites.

Opinions differ about the rate of increase in the proportion of female-headed families.6/ Some, citing the increase in the proportion of nonwhite families headed by women, from 1949 (18.8%) to 1962 (23.2%), see a headlong deterioration, a rapid "crumbling" of the low-income Negro family. Others point out that the rise from 1949 to 1964 was 4.4 percentage points in all (that is, less than one-third of one percentage point a year); that it was gradual from 1949 (18.8%) to 1959 (23.6%), and that from 1959 to 1964 it has remained relatively stable. They conclude that there exists a plateau, or perhaps a gradual but not acute increase in the over-all proportion of broken homes among low-income Negroes.

Those who hold the rapid-deterioration view urge strong action to halt an accelerating breakdown. Those who hold the plateau view urge strong action to remedy adverse conditions that have existed far too long. There is consensus between the two schools of thought with regard to the existence of a long-standing disparity between white and nonwhite rates, and the need for strong and prompt intervention. Differences lie: (a) in interpreting the current situation as a crisis vs. a long-term manifestation; (b) in the attitudes of alarm and hostility that may be held with regard to an erupting crisis, as compared with the problem-solving approach that is more likely with regard to a long-continued situation.

The Father--Present and Absent

The two-parent family is modal in the United States, which is to say that it is the norm for American Negroes. Over-all, two-thirds of Negro families include two parents. At the upper income levels the proportion rises and at the lower income levels it falls. Nevertheless, it is useful to remember that when we speak of the female-headed household we are talking about a minority, even among the poor. The fact that family composition is especially flexible among the very poor means that, although at any given moment, two-thirds of the Negro families in the urban slums include two parents, individual children at various times of their lives may move from two-parent to one-parent homes and vice versa.7/

ALL FAMILIES

AT ALL INCOME LEVELS, MOST FAMILIES HAVE MALE HEADS
BUT FEMALE HEADS ARE MORE PREVALENT AMONG NONWHITES

FAMILIES WITH FEMALE HEADS

THE PROPORTION OF FEMALE FAMILY HEADS FALLS SHARPLY WITH RISING INCOME;
IT IS MOST PREVALENT AMONG THE POOREST FAMILIES IN LARGE CITIES AND IN THE NORTH

SOURCE: U.S. BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

At the same time, outside the slum areas, family stability is the rule rather than the exception. In focusing on family homes, as Erikson has pointed out, the present father tends to be forgotten. Forgotten also is the fact that we know very little about him. We do not even know whether there is evidence to support an occasionally voiced impression that the stable Negro home is more patriarchal than the stable white home.

The great majority of our children--some 87 per cent--live in a home with two parents. Most of the rest live in a one-parent home, and in most cases that parent is the mother.

Few would deny that a harmonious two-parent home offers the best prospect for a child to reach his full potential. On the other hand, a substantial minority of American children, over six and a half million of them, live in a home headed by a woman. It is reasonable, therefore, to review current assumptions about the one-parent home and what it means for the developmental prospects of the children who grow up in it.

It has been our habit to view any deviation from our modal family pattern as an aberration. A number of research findings have tended to reinforce this habit. The question may be raised, however, whether a form that includes so many children and has produced so many effective and apparently happy adults, deserves a less negative status. Perhaps the time has come to recognize the one-parent family as a family form in its own right.

Among reasons urged for re-assessment of the one-parent family as a family form in its own right are the following:

1. The one-parent family is with us and shows no sign of becoming less frequent.

2. There is reason to believe that children in such families are adversely affected by the negative assumptions which cluster around it.

3. Through time and space the family has absorbed a vast array of different forms and still has continued to function as the family.

4. The modal American family may not be as functionally two-parent or as "patriarchal" as is sometimes assumed.

5. Analysis of research findings concerning the one-parent family fails to support a sweeping indictment of its potential for producing children capable of fruitful and gratifying lives.

1. The first proposition is supported by a vast array of statistics. The march of these figures is reminiscent of figures concerning the working mother. Not many years ago, conferences were discussing whether mothers should or should not be permitted or encouraged to work. At present, the main focus of discussion is rather, what kinds of daytime care or other supervision should be established to help the working mother fulfill her dual role. (A subject which is touched upon at somewhat greater length below.) In any case, although there is hope that effective economic and social measures can reduce the frequency of one-parent homes, it seems unlikely that the numbers will be drastically reduced in the very near future.

2. With regard to effects on children of popular assumptions about the one-parent home, the evidence is chiefly presumptive. Specialists in child development provide persuasive discussions and data bearing on the growth of positive and negative identity. There is no lack of evidence that children are alert to the classifications implicit in questions at school about father's occupation, in social differences between mothers who do and do not have a spouse, in the activities of children who do and do not have a father to take them places and do things with them. The fact of a father's presence or absence is ineluctable; the subtle or overt responses to that fact on the part of adults and other children are in themselves responsive to popular assumptions, and are capable of change as those assumptions change.

3. Although relatively few have made an intensive study of family forms through time and space, most students of problems relating to families are aware that, as Witmer and Kotinsky put it:

> All the evidence points to the infinite capacity of the family to change--to change its composition, to redefine the way it shares the care of children with other social institutions--and yet to retain its over-all responsibility for them.8/

4. The extent to which children in two-parent homes are reared at home and taught at school by women, during their formative years, has been the subject of extensive comment. Without assuming that this is to their advantage, some raise question about the extent to which it reduces the contrast between children in one-parent and in two-parent homes.

5. Correlation between undesired behavior or attributes and the one-parent home has been a repetitive research finding. The broken home has been reported as associated with emotional maladjustment, poor school achievement, juvenile delinquency, and illegitimacy. However, when data are controlled for socio-economic status, such correlations often fade out. The relationship is more often apparent in studies that have not made a point of such control. Its occurrence is too frequent to require documentation here. Its absence under adequate statistical controls is less familiar but is reported in a number of studies.9/

In this connection it is sometimes pointed out that studies which claim adequate controls also have shown children doing better in warm, stable one-parent homes than in two-parent homes with tension and friction. If such findings are trusted, the implication may be an underlining of the need to offer to one-parent homes the kinds of support that would enhance the mother's ability to be a competent, unharried and undefeated mother.10/

The proponents of the views summarized above do not by any means advocate the one-parent family as the most desired type. What they do advocate is: (1) recognition of the one-parent family as an existing and fairly common form rather than a sick form or a strange deviation from normality; (2) recognition that a sound one-parent home may be better for a child than a torn and strife-ridden two-parent home; (3) devising of ways to enhance the ability of parents without partners to provide a sound one-parent home.

The choice, unfortunately, is not necessarily between a warm, stable, adequate two-parent home and a one-parent home. No one would hesitate to prefer the former for any American child. To avoid the separation of the parents does not, however, insure for the child a "good" or "adequate" home. Evidence available so far does not justify the assumption that any two-parent home is better for a child than any one-parent home; or that the intactness or broken-ness of the home is, in itself, the variable that determines whether or not a child will reach his full potential. As in so many cases, it is an extremely important variable, the net effect of which depends on a number of other important variables. And as in so many cases, the net effect can be helped or hindered by community attitudes and supports.

The relatively frequent dissolution of marriages among low income Negro families is generally attributed, by students of the subject, to the disadvantaged economic position of the Negro male and the consequent downgrading of his role and status within the family, his own self-esteem, and his readiness to struggle with continuing and insuperable family responsibilities.11/ A new determination to improve the economic status of Negro men coincides with a widening of information about and access to the means of birth control. Some see in this convergence a likelihood of mutual reinforcement. A man with a stable income is more ready to accept the responsibilities of family head than one whose economic position is precarious. At the same time, the responsibilities of a family head are more manageable if the size of the family can be planned. The most optimistic prognosticators add that marital stability is likely to be enhanced by the convergence of male ego satisfaction, female respect for him as a breadwinner, and ability of each to give and to receive sex satisfactions without fear of undesired pregnancy.

Early indications suggest that in general people will reach out for services when theybelieve the services will meet a felt need, and specifically that birth control information and assistance can increase the interest in receiving prenatal health care. "Our experience so far in the maternity and infant care programs gives us hopeful indications that the institution of family planning services more than doubles attendance at postpartum clinics and, in some programs at least, seems to have a favorable influence in attracting women to prenatal clinics early as word gets around that the services are available."12/

ABOUT HALF OF THE NEGRO AND WHITE URBAN FAMILIES* HAD INCOMES 1/ OF $3,000-$7,500 BUT MOST OF THE REMAINING NEGROES HAD LOWER INCOMES WHEREAS MOST OF THE REMAINING WHITES HAD HIGHER INCOMES

1/ AFTER TAXES, 1960-61 *INCLUDES SINGLE CONSUMERS

SOURCE: U.S. DEPARTMENT OF LABOR, BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS

The Present Mother

In a fatherless home, the mother carries a multiple burden: as head of family, as breadwinner, as home-maker, as mentor, comforter and caretaker of children. Some psychologists hold that, during the first two years of a child's life, the father's presence is more important for his psychological, physical and economic help to the mother than for his direct effect on the child's well-being. (This assumes, of course, that he does give such support.)

The one-parent mother of very low income is likely to be either a working mother or a relief recipient. In either case she is likely to be more fatigued, less healthy physically and more subject to depression than a prosperous mother. If she is "on relief," she and her family may be living on less than a subsistence budget--although recent modifications in welfare practices and policies may bring about some modification of this situation.

If she is a working mother, the same comparisons would hold, plus the problem of arranging supervision for the children while she is out of the home. Mothers without husbands are far more likely to work than other mothers with children under eighteen; and nonwhite mothers are more likely to work than white mothers. They are also likely to receive lower pay.

The effects on children of having their mothers work outside the home are hotly debated. Research findings show strong convergence on three conclusions: (1) that almost no generalization holds true for all working mothers or all their children; (2) that many popular assumptions about working mothers and their children do not stand up under challenge; (3) that the mother's working, in itself, is only one among many factors impinging on children, and may well be a secondary factor.

Primary factors appear to condition its impact on children and family life in three chief ways:

(a) The type of arrangements made for the child's care and supervision during the mother's absence. These are partly the result of attitudes, assumption and behavior, which affect the child whether the mother works or not. But to a large extent they are the result of resources available to her.

(b) The way the child perceives and reacts to the mother's absence. This is also a result of basic factors--including his own special needs--which again affect the child in any case.

(c) Parental attitudes and behavior, including specific reactions to the mother's outside work. These, once more, are largely the product of basic factors which would affect the child in any case, although in special instances the working mother situation may have a secondary influence on their impact and interaction.13/

The conclusions listed above have been reported by a number of independent investigators. They leave unanswered a good many questions that connot be discussed here. They also drive home a realization that the very mothers most likely to have no option about working outside the home are the ones least able to arrange for adequate supervision of children while the mother is out of the home.

Some of their problems were highlighted by studies conducted in the late fifties and mid-sixties. The Children's Bureau and the Women's Bureau contracted with the Bureau of Census in February 1965 for a new survey to obtain information on the child-care arrangements of one specific group of working mothers: those women who worked 27 weeks or more in 1964, either full or part time and who had at least one child under 14 years of age living at home. There were 6.1 million mothers in this group. These mothers had a total of 12.3 million children under 14, one-fifth of all U.S. children in this age group. The number of mothers in the labor force with children under six numbered 3.6 million.

A number of different child-care arrangements were reported:

> Almost one-half of the children (46 per cent) were cared for in their own homes, usually by a father (15 per cent) or by another relative (21 per cent) and less frequently by a nonrelative (10 per cent). For 5 per cent the relative caring for the children at home was a child under 16 years of age.
>
> Care in someone else's home (15 per cent) was reported much less frequently than care in own home and was equally divided between care by a relative and by a nonrelative.
>
> Group care (in day centers, after school centers, etc.) was reported for 2 per cent of the children but this type of arrangement also varied by age, being 4 per cent for children under 3, 7 per cent for children 3 to 5, and 1 per cent or less for children 6 years of age or older.
>
> Eight per cent of the children in the survey were

OVER 80% OF THE NONWHITE CHILDREN LIVING IN FAMILIES HEADED BY FEMALES AND 40 – 50% OF THOSE IN FAMILIES WITH MALE HEADS WERE POOR IN 1963

SOURCE: MOLLIE ORSHANSKY, "WHO IS AMONG THE POOR" SOCIAL SECURITY BULLETIN, JULY 1965

> expected to care for themselves, an arrangement that varied by age, amounting to 1 per cent for the children under 6, 8 per cent for those 6 to 11, and 20 per cent for children 12 or 13 years of age. 14/

The picture is not reassuring, especially if one considers that the "latchkey" children for whom no arrangements are made are probably over-represented among the lowest income families, that the proportion of children in group care remains very low, and that some of the arrangements reported are sketchy in the extreme. Studies of children under the AFDC program show a larger proportion of children with no daytime care arrangements. It should be added that some of these studies also have revealed great concern on the part of some mothers about the lack of child supervision, and ingenious arrangements by a few of them to have the children report regularly by telephone.

Children and Daytime Care

In recent years, new and systematic efforts have been made to increase the quantity and quality of day care facilities for children of working mothers, and new legislation has given impetus to these efforts. Nevertheless, the 1965 figures suggest a large gap to be filled.15/

Although research results indicate that outside employment of the mother does not, in and of itself, affect children adversely, a good many believe that it is better for children to be in their own homes with their own mothers during the first two years. Even if present measures do not demonstrate adverse effects, they say, we are not able to tell whether the own mother's care would be better for them. This discussion, invoking "the Bowlby thesis" on the one hand, and, on the other, accounts of the many "fulfilled" men and women who were raised by nurses and governesses, will probably not be resolved in the near future.

Meanwhile, new controversies are flaring about the need of preschool children to obtain training for school adjustment and achievement of a kind believed not to be provided in their own homes. Should day care centers offer, not only custodial care and opportunities for socialization, but also cognitive enrichment to enhance school readiness? The hotly debated and many-faceted subject of preschool care for children of low income families is equally pertinent to discussions of education and discussions of family life. It includes consideration of what mothers offer to children and what a specific mother offers to a specific child under specific circumstances, as compared with what trained and responsive day care attendants or nursery school teachers can offer. It includes questions about whether cognitive enrichment is being sought at the expense of social and emotional development; of whether nursery school cooperativeness is cultivated at the expense of independence and coping abilities; of whether the intellectual gains reported after preschool training are stable, or fade away under the impact of unfortunate school experiences in over-crowded classes, with split shifts, and teachers often hampered by inadequate teaching or by their own unconsciously acquired habits.16/

Closely linked to problems of preschool and later education is the role of the parent in his child's schooling. There is ample evidence that low-income Negro parents have high educational aspirations for their children; and that they (like the rest of the American public) see education as the magic key to wealth and happiness. It is equally clear, however, that they tend to view themselves as having no role in the child's education, aside from housing and feeding him while he goes to school. The school is seen as a foreign and fearsome place, where a parent goes chiefly when summoned because his child has failed in his work or gotten into trouble

There is a widely accepted dictum that small children cannot be helped toward school readiness and social competence if their parents are not involved. Many programs are based on this principle, some very ingenious and apparently effective. Nevertheless, on-the-spot visits often reveal that glowingly-described programs in fact are able to "reach" very few parents, at great cost and investment of staff. The great break-through in parent and family life education has yet to be made, at least for the low income groups. Pending it, the question remains whether one must assume that any child whose parent is unable or unwilling to be "reached" is himself beyond the reach of programs designed to open up for him the way to the kind of life that most people in this country consider a good life.

The use of non-professional aides in nursery schools and day-care centers is urged as one means of combatting both the problem of parental involvement and the problem of insufficient adequate male models. Some centers for daytime care of children from low-income families encourage the mothers to serve as aides, thus increasing their involvement, giving them practice in enhancing intellectual stimulation and interpersonal response, establishing them as active collaborators in the school program, and--in some instances--augmenting their income a little. Some of these centers strive to promote active school-home partnership by arranging for parents to visit the schools their children will later attend and to become acquainted with the teachers in whose classes the children will be.

Some success has been reported in the use of teen-age boys as nursery school aides, including "delinquents" and "near-delinquents." The children respond with eager warmth to these "big men" in their lives. The youthful "big men" in turn, appear to derive great pleasure and profit from the response of the children, who treat them as responsible adults and thus evoke warmth, responsibility and enhanced self-respect.

Recently some parents whose children are in a preschool enrichment program met with the teachers to express their concern about the lax discipline in the school. Children were not smacked when they failed to obey adults, and were not scolded if they were "ugly" to each other. The teachers explained that they were trying to instill inner controls that would continue to operate when the children were too old to spank, and when so many low-income parents feel their children have moved beyond parental control. After considerable discussion, both parents and teachers expressed satisfaction.

The observers, however, were left with a number of questions that echoed concerns expressed by others: Are the children being "socialized" in a way that will be a disadvantage to them in their own neighborhoods?

Are the school and home environments incompatible in a way that will be detrimental to the children and to family cohesion?

Will the encouragement of spontaneity and autonomy in the nursery school equip them badly for the atmosphere of the usual public schoolroom?

Is the cognitive being stressed at the expense of other elements?

Births Out of Wedlock

A number of statements frequently made about births out of wedlock are supported by evidence which--even allowing for vagaries of national reporting that include over-reporting and under-reporting, as well as lack of reporting from some 15 States--still affords solid support for these particular generalizations.

It is solidly established, for example, that numbers of births out of wedlock have increased strikingly in the past twenty years and that rates have tripled since 1938. Rates are far higher among Negroes than among whites. In fact, the majority of children born out of wedlock are nonwhite, although only 12 per cent of the population are nonwhite.

There is also ample and unchallenged evidence that illegitimacy rates are much higher among the poor than among the prosperous. If further evidence were needed on a virtually unchallenged generalization, figures on rates in high and low income tracts should be sufficient. Pakter and associates, for example, found that the proportion of births out-of-wedlock in relation to total nonwhite births varied from a high of 37.5 per cent in the Central Harlem district to a comparative low of 8.9 per cent in the Pelham Bay district.17/ It is difficult to say to what extent differences should be ascribed to greater use of contraception and abortion by the non-poor, to more frequent marriage because of pregnancy among the non-poor, to higher fertility rates among the poor and among nonwhites, and to differential reporting.

A few points, also based on available figures, are less recognized and publicized. Some of these relate to the increase in rates of illegitimacy, by which is meant the number of births out of wedlock per 1,000 unmarried women of child-bearing age. The rise in rates (as differentiated from numbers) has been relatively steady over several decades, and has paralleled to a considerable degree changes in birth rates generally. This rise represents a long-term trend and not a sudden upsurge. Moreover, in the last six years reported (1957-1963) the rates have oscillated at about the same level, rising or falling one or two points or less, but in effect representing a six-year plateau. Thus, the current picture is a rise in numbers and a leveling off in rates of nonwedlock births.18/

The rates for teen-agers have increased less than the rates for other age groups over the past twenty years, and in the last eight years reported their rates have remained relatively constant. The rates for those fourteen and under have not increased since 1947. The population explosion has multiplied numbers in that age group, but rates have remained constant. True, the figures derive from estimates, but this is true of all figures on unmarried mothers and there is as much reason to trust one part of them as to trust another part. Thus any recent increase in the magnitude of problems relating to births out of wedlock is attributable to increase in population rather than to changes in the way people are behaving.

The figures just cited refer to all births out of wedlock, since rates for white and nonwhite are not available separately. Until recently, rates were undoubtedly increasing faster among nonwhites than among whites. Recently, however, nonwedlock births have increased faster among whites than among nonwhites.19/ This minor shift in relative rate of increase does not, of course, alter the large and long-standing difference between white and nonwhite illegitimacy rates nor answer the question noted above, concerning it.

Although rates of illegitimacy have not increased during the past six years, numbers have multiplied, reaching 259,000 in 1963. Unfortunately, social and medical service have not kept pace. It has been estimated roughly that probably less than one-third of our unmarried mothers receive social services near the time of the child's birth. Presumably still fewer receive them at other times.

No careful observer asserts that the insufficient services we do have are distributed evenly or efficiently. With regard to social services, it has been estimated that in 1961 about one unmarried mother in six received services from a public or voluntary child welfare agency.20/ Three-fourths of the mothers served by such agencies in 1961 were white, although the majority of the children born out of wedlock in that year were nonwhite. From this we can estimate that nearly one-third of the white unmarried mothers and less than one-tenth of the nonwhite were served by public or private child welfare agencies.

On the whole, the unmarried mothers served by voluntary child welfare agencies, maternity homes and family service agencies tend to be of higher socio-economic status (including somewhat higher education) than the average for all unmarried mothers in the United States. They also tend, as do those served by public agencies, to be younger and more likely to place their children in adoption. About 70 per cent of the white babies born out of wedlock and less than 10 per cent of the nonwhite are legally adopted.

Failure to receive services does not necessarily mean that service has been sought and refused. On the contrary, a major deterrent to receiving social services is that the unmarried mother-to-be sees no need of them. It should be added that her definition of her needs and her conception of the kind of help social agencies give seldom coincide with agency definitions. Moreover, if all unmarried mothers did seek agency help, the agencies would be unable to cope with the demand.

In the case of medical services, problems of eligibility and of arranging for care bulk far larger than with social services, and many women--married or unmarried--wait until they are in labor in order to obtain emergency service because they are not eligible to receive prenatal care. Far too few mothers, married or unmarried, receive adequate prenatal care and many receive none at all. However, still fewer unmarried than married mothers-to-be receive such care.21/

Those who have studied the problems of low-income Negro unmarried mothers on the whole subscribe to the belief that the most effective way to decrease nonwedlock births in this group would be to improve the economic situation of the low-income Negro male. Census tract data and special studies show that as income increases rates of non-wedlock birth, like the frequency of female-headed homes, decrease.22/

How illegitimacy rates will respond to dissemination of birth control information and devices, remains to be seen. Some predict that, after moderate delay, there will be a radical decrease in the number of births out of wedlock. Those who question the prediction hold that among low-income Negroes a positive value attaches to having a child, both as an affirmation of masculinity or femininity and because children are prized in themselves. This view, in turn, is countered by reminders of nonwedlock children left in hospitals by mothers who do not want to keep them. It seems reasonable to assume that given the information and materials they need, at least some unmarried women will take steps to avoid pregnancy. It is possible also that the possibility of family planning would encourage men to enter and maintain the continuing obligations of marriage--the more so if, at the same time, their own economic stability is improved.

Recent changes in policies with regard to AFDC are also cited as a possible influence in decreasing illegitimacy rates. Among other features, these changes modify the "man in the house" rule, which is said to discourage marriage, on the one hand and, on the other, to encourage over-reporting of illegitimacy through fear of losing the relief check if it is known that there is a stable relation with a man.

The often-heard statement that no stigma attaches to illegitimacy among low-income Negroes usually carries the implication that no stigma means no penalty, and that this means it doesn't matter whether one is born in or out of wedlock. This implication runs contrary to abundant evidence. To be born in wedlock and to have your children born in wedlock is a decided social plus, and a gratification.

The plus value of regular marriage is stronger than the minus value of no marriage. The lack of marriage is by no means a matter of indifference. Some low-income mothers pray for boys in order to avoid "trouble" for their daughters, and when trouble comes there is grief and anger, even though you stick to your own, take care of your own, and never turn them away. There is also a revulsion against forcing a marriage between a girl pregnant out of wedlock and the putative father, unless they really love each other. The question is - is an unhappy marriage more desirable than an out-of-wedlock birth? A girl may wait until she is "sure she loves him"--even though the assurance comes after the baby is born.

Both national statistics and special studies make it clear that women move in and out of married and unmarried motherhood, so that many families include both legitimate and illegitimate children. The pattern is familiar also among middle and high income whites, although with them it is more usual to have one illegitimate child (which may or may not be placed in adoption) and then marry and have children only in wedlock.

Attitudes toward illegitimacy and toward marriage are clearly linked with the economic position of the Negro male. A male head of house who is not a bread-winner and provider is a hazard to the happiness of the marriage, and his loss of economic status is so great a hazard to his intra-family status that he may decamp, either to protect his own ego or to make his family eligible for support from AFDC. Recent changes in the AFDC program are aimed against the second reason for family desertion.

One reason why it is difficult for middle-class observers to fathom attitudes toward sex and marriage among the poor is failure to recognize that values may be honored by people who do not adhere to them in daily life. This discrepancy between what one believes and what one does may arise from conflict between different sets of values observed by the same individual, and different hierarchies of values held by different nations, socio-economic classes, or individuals. Food and shelter for self or family may rank higher than scrupulous honesty; avoidance of an unhappy marriage may rank higher than legitimate birth status, and the value hierarchy may be constant in an individual's life or may change according to the situation.

Rodman posits the "value stretch," which he describes as broader among the poor than among the prosperous. The very poor, he says, "share the general values of the society with members of other classes, but in addition they have stretched these values or developed alternative values, which help them to adjust to their deprived circumstances." 23/ Thus, the "lower-class value stretch" refers to "the wider range of values, and the lower degree of commitment to these values, to be found within the lower class." Some commentators raise question whether the "stretch" is wider among the low income groups than among those with middle or high incomes, or merely more perceptible to middle-class observers. The behavior of the prosperous with regard to taxes is mentioned in this connection, as are sharp business practices, sexual infidelity, and the frequent placing of career advancement before the needs of family or country. No one has devised an accurate measure of stretch-difference. It seems clear, however, that on all socio-economic levels people can consciously believe in certain values, even while they continue to act as if those values did not exist. 24/

Child Rearing Practices

A number of differences between the poor and the prosperous with regard to child-rearing practices have been described, and attempts have been made to relate some of them directly to school achievement, social satisfactions and later vocational adequacy. Among the differences frequently cited: The poor are less likely to encourage a child's interest in exploration, discovery, inquiry; they are more likely to reward inactivity and passivity as attributes of a "good child;" they are less likely to enhance and reward development of verbal skills through precept and approval; they are more likely to display repressive and punitive attitudes toward sex, sex questioning and experimentation, and a view of the sex relationship as basically exploitative; they are more likely to rely on authoritarian methods of child rearing; they are more likely to discipline by corporal punishment, harshly and inconsistently applied.

Little challenge is raised against these generalizations, although many are quick to point out that some of them are almost inevitable in crowded dwellings where adults are harried, depressed and fatigued.

Some other generalizations about child-rearing practices, as about attributes of the poor generally, arouse more objections. Some of the objections relate to the investigators' use of "culture-bound instruments"; some to the claim that the traits involved are direct products of the "reality world" in which both parents and children dwell. These kinds of challenges have been raised against statements that children are reared to low esteem of selves and parents, present time-orientation, impulse gratification, fatalism, emphasis on "keeping out of trouble" rather than positive achievement, lack of goal commitment.

AMONG POOR MEN THE LARGEST PROPORTION OF NONWHITE WERE IN FARM, SERVICE AND LABORER OCCUPATIONS; THE LARGEST PROPORTION OF WHITE WERE IN CRAFTS, PRODUCTION OR CLERICAL WORK. AMONG THE NONPOOR, THERE ARE FEW IN FARMING AND THE BULK OF BOTH NONWHITE AND WHITE WORKERS ARE IN CRAFTS, CLERICAL OR PRODUCTION WORK.

1/ POOR BY SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION CRITERIA. BASED ON A 1963 INCOME OF $1,580 A YEAR FOR A NONFARM SINGLE PERSON UNDER 65 ($1,470 AGED 65 AND OVER), TO $5,090 FOR A NONFARM FAMILY OF 7 OR MORE PERSONS. THE POVERTY LINE FOR SINGLE PERSONS AND FAMILIES LIVING ON A FARM WAS PUT AT 60 PERCENT OF THE ABOVE.

SOURCE: OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

Objections are raised also to implications that some of the attitudes and psychological sets listed in the preceding paragraph are basic traits rather than responses to immediate environment; and that they apply globally to an income category or neighborhood. For example, a study of child rearing practices among low income families in Washington, D. C. reports that the amount of diversity among low income families is overlooked and underrated in popular and scientific thinking.25/ In addition, the study supports the following propositions:

1. The life chances and the actual behavior of low income families are not to be confused with the cultural values and the preferences of families so classified.

2. A great deal of behavior among low income urban families reflects a straddling of behavior and of goals associated with deprivation and poverty on the one hand, and of behavior and of goals associated with higher socio-economic status and affluence on the other hand.

3. Among a considerable proportion of low income urban families observed, failures to conform in overt behavior to the so-called middle class values are due less to any lack of recognition of, and affirmation of, middle class values than they are due to such factors as (a) lack of money to support these values, (b) a process of diminution in the will to do so, and (c) a lessened confidence in their own, and especially their children's, life chances in the present and future.

4. Most parents in low income families tend to show greater conformity to and convergence with the ascribed standards of parents of middle and upper income in what they indicate they want than in their actual behavior.

5. The range and the specifics of the child rearing concerns of low income parents approximate closely the range and the specifics of child rearing concerns ascribed to upper and middle income families. The specifics of child rearing concerns and the priorities attached to particular concerns vary from family to family.

6. The amount of family income and the evenness of its flow makes a significant difference in child rearing priorities acted upon by parents.

7. Major priority among families with low income tends to be given to meeting basic physical needs -- food, clothing, and shelter.

8. The need to invest a significant proportion of energies into meeting basic physical needs on inadequate income can result in a kind of compartmentalization of child rearing concerns.

AMONG WHITE AS WELL AS NONWHITE POOR WOMEN, MOST WERE IN SERVICE OCCUPATIONS; AMONG THE NONPOOR THE MAJORITY OF THE NONWHITE WERE STILL IN SERVICES BUT THE MAJORITY OF THE WHITE WERE CRAFTSMEN, CLERICAL OR PRODUCTION WORKERS.

1/ POOR BY SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION CRITERIA. BASED ON A 1963 INCOME OF $1,580 A YEAR FOR A NONFARM SINGLE PERSON UNDER 65 ($1,470 AGED 65 AND OVER), TO $5,090 FOR A NONFARM FAMILY OF 7 OR MORE PERSONS. THE POVERTY LINE FOR SINGLE PERSONS AND FAMILIES LIVING ON A FARM WAS PUT AT 60 PERCENT OF THE ABOVE.

SOURCE: OFFICE OF ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY

9. With few exceptions, low income parents do not approve of the circumstances in which they now live or in which their children are being brought up.

10. A major aspiration of low income parents for their children is to see their children do better in life -- especially in jobs, education, and family behavior -- than they have been able to do themselves.

11. Many low income parents assess their own child rearing performances in terms of whether they have made advances over the child rearing circumstances and performances of their own parents.

12. The economic and social roles wished of, and expected of, the low income male as husband and father by wives, mothers, and children are not different from those of the middle and upper classes, but his abilities -- and the family and community consequences of his inabilities -- to fulfill these roles are different.

Some Familiar Generalizations

A great many generalizations are made about the poor, often without differentiating among various categories of people and life styles found on the lower income levels. In general, the ill-defined group referred to as "the poor" does not include the stable, respectable working class. Nevertheless, certain characteristics are reported in inverse relation to income from top to bottom,(e.g., education, physical and mental health, regular employment, adequate housing, privacy, membership in organizations).26/ Some of the attributions come from studies based on inadequate breakdowns, so that in our studies as in our life, class distinctions become blurred.

The term "culture of poverty" is used by Oscar Lewis in a dynamic sense to express the interplay of circumstance and attitude. There is no special issue when the term is used in this way. Issues arise when the term is used to mean a world outlook or style of life that has become a thing in itself. At this edge of the term, there is an implication that the source of such a world outlook lies in other people -- parents, peers -- who hold the same attitudes and that the attitudes persist, whatever their relation to reality.

Many of the attitudes and much of the behavior of persons enmeshed in "the culture of poverty" are a response to facts of life. One author writes about the effects of prolonged malnutrition:

> ...various functional changes occur. These functional changes are manifested clinically by symptoms usually placed in the neurasthenic syndrome. They include such common complaints as excessive fatigability, disturbances in sleep, inability to concentrate, 'gas,' > heart consciousness, and various queer bodily sensations... Occurrences [of these symptoms] as a manifestation of tissue depletion of certain nutrients is undoubted.

As for drive and ambition, a study describes "depression, apathy, and lethargy" as consequences of malnutrition. The tendency to blame others rather than one's self has also been attributed to inadequate nutrition.27/

The following effects have been attributed to poor housing:

> ...a perception of one's self that leads to pessimism and passivity, stress to which the individual cannot adapt, poor health, and a state of dissatisfaction; pleased in company but not in solitude, cynicism about people and organizations, a high degree of sexual stimulation without legitimate outlet, and difficulty in household management and child rearing; ...relationships that tend to spread out in the neighborhood rather than deeply into the family.28/

The ways in which some of these effects are produced are almost self-evident. Poor health is a consequence of the effects of poor housing in contributing to accidents, to respiratory and skin diseases, and so forth. Poor health has its attitudinal and behavioral consequences, of course. The effects of crowding are possibly less apparent but are felt through their effects on privacy, on time and opportunity for communication, and on the tendency to live out-of-doors. Living in congested neighborhoods, where tenants are transient and physical hazards are real, produces in many a constant sense of loneliness, helplessness and anxiety.

With regard to the higher level of aggression attributed to the poor, one report comments that, in encouraging their children to fight back, slum dwellers show a realistic perception of the social problems in their neighborhoods. This view receives support from a low-income father who said of his son: "I...knock the hell out of him, 'cause he can't be no sissy and grow up in this here jungle."

One frequent generalization made about the poor is that they have less belief in their control over their own destinies than the prosperous--less sense of autonomy. And to this, another commentator responds--why wouldn't they?

Perhaps the most frequent generalization of all is that the poor have a shorter time perspective than the prosperous, that they are present-oriented rather than future-oriented. A number of challenges to this one have been heard lately, especially with regard to the Negro poor. Those who question the blanket accuracy of the present time-orientation generalization, add that in many instances future time-orientation just doesn't make sense for many of the poor. Nevertheless, they claim, when it does make sense to people of any income level, they plan for the future.

Many of the middle class have been recruited from the poor, many of the poor have middle class tastes and preferences. Time orientation may not be a culture trait or a unitary trait. It may be rather a multiple and realistic response to the multiple aspects of life as it presents itself, with future-oriented planning and performance where that makes sense, and present-oriented response where the future is unpromising and unpredictable.

It has been argued from cases and from large-scale but partial experiences (e.g., moving poor people into public housing, which rapidly turn into slums) that the attitudes and behavior--however they began--persist well beyond the need for them. Virtually all evidence lies in a contrary direction, that upward mobility is accompanied by change in values. The difference between the impression and the evidence may depend on whether a shorter or longer time span is considered or whether one element of reality (housing) or several (schools, nutrition, job opportunity) are changed.

There is abundant evidence of resources for change among Negro families, particularly among the children. Dr. Robert Coles writes:

> ...I was constantly surprised at the endurance shown by children we would all call poor or, in the current fashion, "culturally disadvantaged."
>
> What enabled such children from such families to survive, emotionally and educationally, ordeals I feel sure many white middle-class boys and girls would find impossible? What has been the source of the strength shown by the sit-in students, many of whom do not come from comfortable homes but, quite the contrary, from rural cabins or slum tenements? Why do some Negro children--like the ones I have studied--behave so idealistically and bravely, while others go on to lives of uselessness and apathy, lives filled with hate, violence and crime?29/

REFERENCES

1. Ernest W. Burgess, Preface to E. Franklin Frazier, The Negro Family in the United States (New York, 1957).

2. Office of Policy Planning and Research, United States Department of Labor, The Negro Family: The Case for National Action (March 1965), pp. 9 ff.

3. Hylan Lewis, "The Changing Negro Family" in The Nation's Children, Vol. I (New York, 1960), p. 126.

4. Elizabeth Herzog and Rose Bernstein, Health Services for Unmarried Mothers, Children's Bureau Publication No. 425, Welfare Administration, U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (Washington, D. C., 1964), p. 32.

5. Jack Lefcowitz, "Poverty and Negro-White Family Structure," unpublished paper, Research and Planning Division, Office of Economic Opportunity (1965).

6. Office of Policy Planning and Research, United States Department of Labor, The Negro Family: The Case for National Action (March 1965), pp. 9 ff.

7. The section entitled "The Father--Present and Absent" is part of an unpublished manuscript by Elizabeth Herzog, Children's Bureau, Welfare Administration, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

8. Helen Leland Witmer and Ruth Kotinsky, Personality in the Making (New York, 1962), p. 209.

9. Ivan F. Nye, Family Relationships and Delinquent Behavior (New York, 1958). Clark Vincent, Unmarried Mothers (New York, 1961).

10. Ivan F. Nye, "Child Adjustment in Broken and in Unhappy Broken Homes," Marriage and Family Living, Vol. 19 (1957); and Virginia Wimperis, The Unmarried Mother and her Child (London, 1960).

11. E. Franklin Frazier, The Negro in the United States (New York, 1957). St. Clair Drake and Horace R. Cayton, Black Metropolis (New York, 1954). Thomas F. Pettigrew, A Profile of the Negro American (Princeton, 1964). Hylan Lewis, "The Changing Negro Family," in The Nation's Children (New York, 1960). Office of Policy Planning and Research, United States Department of Labor, The Negro Family: The Case for National Action (March 1965).

12. Katherine B. Oettinger, "This Most Profound Challenge," U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Welfare Administration, Children's Bureau (1965). Address before the Fall Conference on Public Family Planning Clinics, Hotel Roosevelt, New York, New York, September 9, 1965.

13. Elizabeth Herzog, Children of Working Mothers, U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Welfare Administration, Children's Bureau Publication No. 382, (1960); reprinted 1964. See also Alberta Engvall Siegel, Lois Meek Stolz, Ethel Alice Hitchcock, and Jean Adamson: "Dependence and Independence in the Children of Working Mothers," Child Development (1959) Vol. 30, pp. 533-546.

14. U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Welfare Administration, Children's Bureau and U. S. Department of Labor, Women's Bureau, Child Care Arrangements of the Nation's Working Mothers - a preliminary report (Washington, D. C., 1965), (Processed) pp. 1-4.

15. Kathryn Close, "Day Care As a Service For All Who Need It," Children (July-August 1965), pp. 157-160.

16. Kenneth B. Clark, Dark Ghetto (New York, 1965); S. M. Miller and Ira E. Harrison, "Types of Dropouts: 'The Unemployables,'" Presented at the Annual Meeting of the American Orthopsychiatric Association, Washington, D. C., March, 1963. (Syracuse University Youth Development Center, Syracuse, New York).

17. Jean Pakter, et al, "Out-of-Wedlock Births in New York City: I-- Sociological Aspects," American Journal of Public Health, LI (1961).

18. The section entitled "Births Out of Wedlock" is based on the following papers: Elizabeth Herzog, "The Chronic Revolution," Journal of Clinical Pediatrics, to be published December, 1965 or January, 1966; "Unmarried Mothers: Some Questions to be Answered and Some Answers to be Questioned," Child Welfare (October 1962); Hylan Lewis and Elizabeth Herzog, "Priorities in Research on Unmarried Mothers," in Research Perspectives on the Unmarried Mother, Child Welfare League of America, Inc. (New York, 1961).

19. National Center for Health Statistics, Public Health Service, U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare: Vital Statistics of the United States, 1963: Volume 1, Natality.

20. Hannah M. Adams, Social Services for Unmarried Mothers and Their Children Provided through Public and Voluntary Child Welfare Agencies. Child Welfare Report No. 12. Children's Bureau, Social Security Administration, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (Washington, D. C., 1962).

21. Elizabeth Herzog and Rose Bernstein, Health Services for Unmarried Mothers, Children's Bureau Publication 425, Welfare Administration, U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (1964).

22. Paul H. Gebhard, et al, Pregnancy, Birth and Abortion (New York, 1958).

23. Hyman Rodman, "The Lower-Class Value Stretch," Social Forces, Vol. 42, No. 2 (December 1963), pp. 205-215. See also, Hylan Lewis, "Culture, Class and the Behavior of Low Income Families," prepared for Conference on Lower Class Culture, Barbizon Plaza Hotel, New York City, June 27-29, 1963.

24. William J. Goode, "Illegitimacy in the Caribbean Social Structure," American Sociological Review, Vol. 25 (1960). Elizabeth Herzog, "Some Assumptions About the Poor," Social Services Review (1962). Oscar Lewis, Children of Sanchez (New York, 1961). Hortense Powdermaker, After Freedom: A Cultural Study in the Deep South (New York, 1939).

25. From Hylan Lewis, "Culture, Class and Child Rearing among Low Income Urban Negroes," prepared for inclusion as a chapter in a forthcoming volume, Arthur Ross (ed.), Jobs and Color, to be published by Harcourt Brace, and World. The paper is based on materials from a 5-year project, "Child Rearing Practices Among Low Income Families in the District of Columbia," sponsored by the Health and Welfare Council of the National Capital Area, and supported by NIMH Grants, MH 278-5.

26. Seymour Martin Lipset, "Democracy and Working-Class Authoritarianism," American Sociological Review, Vol. 24:4, pp. 482-501 (August 1959). Elizabeth Herzog, "Some Assumptions About the Poor," Social Service Review, Vol. 37, No. 4 (December 1963).

27. J. Jolliffe, "The Pathogenesis of Deficiency Disease," A. Keys, "Caloric Deficiency and Starvation," and F. F. Tisdall, "The Relation of Nutrition to Health," in J. Jolliffe, F. F. Tisdall, and P. R. Cannon, Clinical Nutrition (1950).

28. Alvin L. Schorr, Slums and Social Insecurity, Division of Research and Statistics, Social Security Administration, U. S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, 1963.

29. Robert Coles, "There's Sinew in Negro Family," Washington Post (October 10, 1965).

SUMMARY

The Family: Resources for Change

The matters discussed by the panel broadly overlapped areas considered by the other panels, although some of the items considered were unique to the Negro family. The specific proposals advocated by the panel were as follows:

A. Assurance of Adequate Economic Support for Families.

1. Implementation of a full employment policy, including public works and needed services.

2. Establishment of an adequate minimum wage and elimination of unwarranted wage differentials.

3. Expanded programs of housing and educational subsidies.

4. Establishment of family allowances or guaranteed minimum income (through a negative income tax) to give family strength and stability where direct earning power is insufficient.

5. Improvement of job opportunities (especially for youth) through review and revision of overwritten job descriptions to reflect the level of training and skill actually required to perform particular jobs.

6. Continuation and broadening of the "Head Start" type of program.

7. Broadening the Negro middle class by public and private programs encouraging business enterprise, entrance into the skilled trades, and improvement of Negro colleges.

8. Increases in programs of consumer education, consumer protection, and consumer aid (including low cost loans through credit unions and readily available emergency loans for families).

B. Provision of Non-Economic Family Supports and Services.

1. Legal protection and advice for the poor, especially in connection with jobs, housing, consumer practices, and family and child welfare.

2. Creation of "male models" for children by suppling jobs for men to make them useful and respected members of the community, increasing the number of male teachers in schools, and building up local and group "heroes."

3. Development of new institutions for young people that will catch their imagination and give them a sense of commitment and worth (such as the Peace Corps has done).

4. Voluntary programs providing the most effective means of contraception.

5. Concern for relationships within the family as well as for external pressures operating on the family.

6. Family improvement programs seeking the betterment of housing, health care, parental confidence and control of younger children, prevention of out-of-wedlock birth, and more enlightened ways of dealing with low income out-of-wedlock mothers and children.

C. Elimination of Discrimination in Opportunities and Services.

1. Changing staffing patterns to include more Negroes in administrative positions in existing family programs and services.

2. Setting up training schools and standards that would effect changes in the orientation and attitude of staff persons toward Negro and low-income clients.

3. Improving the circulation of information about available programs and services.

4. Stepping up evaluation and surveillance of programs and better use of available compliance procedures.

5. Requiring that a certain ratio be maintained between money spent on administrative structure and the amount funneled into direct services.

6. Considering the requirement that some federal programs be made obligatory on the states rather than a matter of choice.

D. Coordination of Programs and Services.

1. Proclamation and implementation of a "National Family Policy:" (a) to reaffirm the importance of the family on all socio-economical levels; (b) to affirm the rights of families on all levels to resources and experiences that promote family viability and choice; (c) to provide direction and guidance in realizing objectives through national and local, public and private, programs; and (d) to emphasize the role of the government as an enabler rather than super-parent.

2. Establishing an Under Secretary for Family, perhaps in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

3. Involvement of citizen groups (including civil rights groups) in implementing and supporting family policy.

4. Centralization and establishment of multi-service, family-oriented and community-based agencies in which health, education and welfare services would be centralized.

THE FAMILY: RESOURCES FOR CHANGE

A SYNOPSIS OF THE PANEL DISCUSSIONS ON THE FAMILY, NOVEMBER 17 AND 18, 1965

at the

Planning Session on the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights"

A. Family Goals and Policy

Several main strands of thought and feeling emerged from the variety of opinions expressed. Although there were shades of difference and competing opinions about such issues as the causes and the extent of family problems among Negroes, the specifics of proposed programs, and the priorities that should be given them, there was clear consensus about the following:

1. A national family policy should be proclaimed and implemented

2. The viability of the family is dependent primarily on its economic status and resources

3. The central subjects of all the other panels are also an integral part of the discussion about the family

4. Discrimination is still a major factor affecting the choices open to Negro families and their abilities to realize potentials for themselves and the community

5. All families should have the right to evolve in directions of their own choosing -- to do what they want to do for their children; they should have the supports -- economic and non-economic -- to exercise that right

* * *

1. A NATIONAL FAMILY POLICY

One result of an integrated national family policy would be to check the multiplying of services and agencies and the fragmentation of families that result from uncoordinated programs and services.

> ...what we really need is a national family policy -- something more than just a Negro family policy. We need at least recognition of our national responsibility in this area just as there are national responsibilities with respect to the economy, health, education, welfare and the like.

One possibility mentioned was that there should be an Under-Secretary for Family, perhaps in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

There was consensus that a national family policy should provide directions and guidance in realizing the objectives of current family-oriented programs, and in pushing toward needed innovations in policies, administration and in funding -- national and local, public and private. Further, it was stressed, a national family policy should emphasize the role of the Government as enabler rather than super-parent.

A specific role for civil rights organizations in implementing and supporting family policy was suggested by a representative:

> ...we might supply these agencies...with some of the resources and assistance whereby...family assistance might be created at the local level....I think we ought to involve these citizens groups and race relations groups as an adjunct of the local and state government /in carrying out family programs/.

2. ECONOMIC SUPPORTS AND FAMILY VIABILITY

The issue of jobs for men is paramount. Jobs for men are the key to family stability and to individual status and self-respect. Just as firm, however, was the agreement that true family strength and stability must be maintained by other sources of income where direct earning power is insufficient.

The problems that have aroused public comment were seen as products of economic, social and legal deprivations. Removal of such deprivations was agreed to be prerequisite to amelioration of the problems. Non-economic supports were discussed and recommended, but prime priority was given to the economic base. On this point, consensus amounted to unanimity.

3. CENTRAL SUBJECTS OF OTHER PANELS: "THE PROBLEMS ARE ALL OF A PIECE"

The view that "the problems are all of a piece" was accepted and reiterated frequently:

> Almost everything we say about the Negro family here goes back to one of the other sessions....
>
> The report on the Negro family was not designed to be introduced in any way as if it were a new element to explain the situation of the Negro in America. On the contrary. The report was designed simply to show...the effect...the results of unemployment, of the ghetto, of discrimination, of bad health, of low pay....

4. DISCRIMINATION DIMINISHES OPTIONS

The panel was reminded repeatedly that "discrimination is not passe." The ways in which deprivation of civil rights leads to other deprivations were prominent concerns. Prominent among the deprivations pointed out was the lack of choices, options, alternatives for poor families. If "the poor" feel fatalistic and robbed of choices, it is because to so large an extent they are not in a position to choose:

> "The real horror of the ghetto today is lack of choice."

5. FAMILY RIGHTS TO RESOURCES

Although the focus of attention in these planning sessions was the low-income Negro family, the point was frequently made that whether it be rich or poor, white or Negro, the family today is not free of problems. Furthermore, there was agreement that American families have the right to certain basic resources:

> We want /family/ goals which are essentially the same for Negroes as well as whites, for rich as well as poor -- goals which are essentially the same but which would permit wide variation and individual differences..
>
> Every child born in the society has a right to those resources and experiences which will socialize him in such a way that he can function in the society as it is....

* * *

B. Specific Proposals

In general, the specific proposals fall into two major categories -- (1) economic and (2) non-economic supports for family viability and choice.

1. Family income and a sense of status through jobs. High among proposals for providing adequate and stable income families was a full employment policy. The chief special means mentioned were public works and needed services, with the constant reminder that these should be undertaken on a massive scale and should be necessary and useful activities: "No made work, no busy work."

2. Among the sources in addition to jobs proposed as possibilities of assuring adequate income were family allowances, guaranteed minimal income, negative income tax.

3. Also mentioned were innovative services and added protections for families that would have the effects of generating and preserving income.

4. Among the supports needed by families, housing and housing subsidies were prominently mentioned. It is not only the poor, it was pointed out, who need help with housing. The marginal or moderate income family also requires help with this, as well as with education. And here again, it was stressed that the family requires help as a right, not as charity.

5. The Head Start concept and approach received firm endorsement as an undertaking that might generate meaningful, productive jobs. It was urged that this kind of program be broadened to include Head Start programs for adolescents, for adults, and for older people. Such programs, it was felt, can offer real support to family life, giving children enrichment they have not received before, giving adults opportunities for work that is rewarding psychologically and financially, and at the same time laying a basis for improved family life.

The necessity of thinking in terms of "jobs for the future" and "education for the future", rather than current needs only, was stressed in connection with economic maintenance and meaningful work proposals, particularly with respect to youth.

Among the suggestions for making more jobs available for youths was the the rewriting of "all the job descriptions in this country that are overwritten." Here it was felt that many jobs can be successfully performed by those who are now automatically ruled out by arbitrary and irrelevant "qualifications."

6. Although family planning was mentioned seldom, it was heartily supported and appeared to be unanimously endorsed. The present large number of unwanted pregnancies was seen as a threat to marital and also to economic stability.

7. The thought was expressed by some participants that a prime objective of efforts to improve the overall economic and social position of the Negro should be the broadening of the Negro middle class:

> This is one way of getting people into skilled trades -- and the payoff is money. And the payoff is also a different kind of community circumstances...which gives a better chance to survive in the rather complex situation in which we exist.

8. The need to deal with family problems arising from internal relationships, as well as from external pressures. There were repeated reminders that the concern for better family living includes a concern for relationships within the family as well as for the external pressures operating on the family. The thought was expressed that "the automatic relieving of the external pressures does not automatically take care of the pressures of family life."

> I think the sense of this whole gathering has been that the most important thing that needs to be done is to get families involved together -- whole families involved with each other and within the family itself.

Although the discussion of the panel neither developed nor projected a picture of a self-perpetuating "tangle of pathology" that would not respond to sharply increased employment of Negro men, it did focus on recognition of long-standing conditions that need to be attacked through the provision of non-economic as well as economic supports. Among the problems referred to and discussed were births out of wedlock, health, housing, parental control of younger children, and extra-family influences. The discussion of illegitimacy, for example, focused on the need for programs of prevention as well as more effective and enlightened ways of dealing with children and mothers in out-of-wedlock situations.

9. Needs in services and programs for families. One cluster of concerns is related to the fragmentation of services and its effects on families and communities. The magnitude and the complexity of administrative problems were recognized, although this recognition did not diminish concern for the results of these problems. There were more questions than answers concerning ways of inter-relating government and non-governmental programs, national, state and local operations. But the need for better coordination among all was strongly stated.

> There is a need to find some central clearing house in the Government and outside...so that these programs pull together for a change. And I don't think this is limited to programs for the Negro and the Negro family. This is true all the way across the board.

One type of proposal was for multi-service agencies in which health, education and welfare services would be centralized. These would not be merely referral centers, but offer integrated services. Such centers would be family-oriented and community-based.

10. To some extent, programs were felt to be inadequate because of insufficient funds. However, the way available funds were used also came in for criticism. One proposal called for review of existing programs and the application of specific criteria to their operation: for example, a requirement that there be a certain ratio of money spent on administrative structure to money funnelled into direct services or activities providing direct income for poor people.

11. Two cogent points were made by one of the resource persons: (1) there is a lack of information in some quarters about programs that are available or possible under provisions of current legislation, and (2) the program lags and gaps are frequently at the state and local--not the Federal--level.

> ...And I would like to submit for consideration of the group the idea that some of these opportunities that are available at the Federal level should become obligatory on the states rather than a matter of choice.

The most positive proposals involving family and child services concerned the need for new administrative structures. The most negative comments related to the actual carrying out of current programs.

12. Considerable attention was given to the ways in which the administration of programs discriminates against Negroes: for example, the preference of maternity homes for white unmarried mothers, the tendency of private institutions to take "the child that is easiest," leaving the Negro child to a public hospital where he is "given diagnosis but not treatment," the differences in treatment of juvenile delinquents who are white or non-white, poor or nonpoor.

13. Comments about personnel in programs dealing directly with families touched on the need for training, and on efforts to change attitudes that frequently combine impersonality with disrespect. Perhaps, it was suggested, the practitioner is part of the problem, and not just the family.

14. Some saw running throughout much of the discussion a crucial question -- whether we shoot for integration or for strengthening the Negro community through increased services and income. These were not seen as mutually exclusive, since it was proposed that simultaneous efforts to provide for both might foster economic viability and enable many families now relatively powerless to exercise options and command events.

15. Until such times as the viability and choice of low-income Negro families has been significantly improved -- and one sign of significant change would be more fathers in the home -- two kinds of support were recommended especially; (1) help for the low-income mother in her multiple roles -- homemaker, child rearer, and breadwinner; (2) effective role models for chilfren -- girls as well as boys.

16. Effective male models. Whether or not the male model must be resident in the home, however, there was no dissent from the proposition that boys -- and girls, too -- need to have before them the examples of competent, responsible, achieving men. The best way to achieve male models, it was felt, is to provide jobs for men so they are members of the community. Let youngsters see men naturally filling jobs that command respect.

Among suggested new sources for effective male models were: more male teachers in elementary and high schools, male aids in non-professional capacities helping professional workers.

17. Emphasis was placed on the need for new institutions for young people, the parents of tomorrow -- institutions that will give them imagination, role, worth, excitement and a sense of fulfillment as did the Peace Corps and the civil rights movement.

18. Among the strongest and most frequent complaints about old and new family-oriented programs was failure to involve those concerned -- that is, the poor; failure to ask them and failure to listen to them. Three not inconsistent points about the involvement of the poor were set forth:

(a) There are articulate people among the poor who might make contributions to planning and programs affecting the family;

(b) The absence of large numbers of the poor from the planning session does not necessarily mean that effective planning for poor families is impractical; and

(c) The poor should be represented in significant numbers at the proposed spring conference.

* * *

On the first day, during a discussion of the objectives of the planning session, one participant suggested:

> I wonder if our goals should not be to try to discover if it is true that the economic basis is the main thrust of all our solutions.

During the discussion of the second day he said:

> Throughout the conference, I have undergone a complete turn around.... I have come back to the classic position -- to the point of what is absolutely necessary. Is the goal of full employment absolutely necessary? Is that the only way of dealing with the necessity of competing socially so that the ideals of the family and the person are raised? In the present state of society, I suppose it's necessary....I would think that almost anything we would say would first have full employment as a central thrust and all of the rest of this is frosting on the cake. I've changed. I've turned around from hearing all of you talk.

* * *

PLANNING SESSION
for the
WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Washington Hilton Hotel
November 16-17-18, 1965

This agenda paper was prepared by the author to stimulate discussion of the work group. It does not represent any policy determination of the White House Conference, and is not a final statement of the issues. The agenda outline suggested by the author is a starting point for discussion and subject to consideration and revision by the work group participants themselves.

AGENDA PAPER #7
THE COMMUNITY: INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIAL ACTION
Dr. David Danzig

I. Introduction

The purposes of this panel's deliberations are to identify those obstacles to the full sharing by Negroes in American life which could be eliminated through community action, and to explore ways to strengthen such community action programs. The question is what can be done by government, business, labor, church, welfare and other private groups to assist attempts to give the Negro a greater voice in the decisions which affect the quality of his community life -- the condition of his schools, his housing, his parks, his health and welfare services, his opportunities to earn and to spend his income. And the question is what community action techniques seem most promising to fulfill this goal.

In recent years there has been wider acceptance of the idea that mobilization of power is essential to bring about social change. The realization of the connection between social power and social change has lead to a re-evaluation of community-oriented programs. This approach to community organization has assumed some of the characteristics of a movement; recently it has been given impetus by the federal juvenile delinquency program and later by the anti-poverty programs. Traditional methods are currently being re-examined to see whether they involve their intended beneficiaries on the level of policy, planning and staffing. Established and new agencies are being subjected to a second look in the light of this new criterion. New techniques are being found for giving a community greater voice, and for making that voice heard by policy-makers.

II. Major Goals for Community Organization

There seems to be general agreement on the broad aims of community action; whatever specific changes it seeks to achieve as to jobs, housing, education, etc., it is also expected to mobilize community power to:

(1) create functional organization by which all segments of the society can assume a role in developing programs to meet their specific needs;

(2) open up existing social agencies, institutions, and organizations to the full participation of the poor -- in policy making, program development and staffing, as well as in the full and equal use of services;

(3) initiate programs that will foster experiences among the poor that can be the basis of political and economic power.

Questions:

1. In what ways does, or can, the Federal Government contribute to the above goals of community action?

a. What changes in the Community Action Program of the Office of Economic Opportunity are needed to make it more effective in forwarding these goals?

b. How may community action components be built into other anti-poverty programs, such as the Job Corps, Head Start, and adult education?

c. Should the spirit of "maximum feasible participation of the poor" be extended to other federal agencies, such as the Housing Department's urban renewal, public housing, and other programs? Which other federal programs and agencies should be reviewed in this light?

d. Should federal agencies assume more responsibility for measuring the extent to which Negroes benefit from their programs? In what ways could community action bring this kind of information to federal attention?

2. What kinds of demonstration projects or action programs can be developed to create greater involvement of the poor in decisions at the state and local levels?

a. What are the possibilities of the application by state and local government of "maximum feasible participation of the poor" on boards, commissions and staffs of relevant programs and agencies?

b. In what specific ways could this be brought about?

c. What are some other ways of seeing to it that the needs of the minority are understood, and met, in the carrying out of state and local programs and services?

III. Major Community Organization Gaps in Low-Income Neighborhoods

While there is no monolithic, undifferentiated Negro community, one does find some pattern of communal associations among Negroes. There are, for example, church and fraternal associations, leisure time activities, and business relationships. Some of these associations transcend socio-economic and geographic boundaries. But there are few Negro communal institutions of the sort found in Catholic, Jewish and other ethnic communities.

The great need for social welfare services on the part of Negroes goes hand in hand with the lack of resources to supply such services. The absence of a voluntary welfare structure is in part responsible for a lack of influence in shaping the policies of the public welfare agencies.

Questions:

1. What are the major organizational lacks in low-income areas -- political - economic - social?

2. To what degree are the policies and practices of social welfare agencies now being shaped by local community groups representing the interests of low-income Negroes?

3. How effective are such groups in influencing policies and in representing individual citizens who have grievances before these agencies?

4. How adequate are the Community Action Programs fostered by the Economic Opportunity Act to fill community organization gaps in low-income neighborhoods? If there are inadequacies, are they those of funds? Of personnel? Of encouraging local action?

5. In what ways could other groups or agencies, public or private, help community efforts to win improved welfare services?

6. To what extent and by what means can and should the Office of Economic Opportunity, or other federal agencies make funds available to local private groups and community organizations engaged in voter education and citizenship training?

IV. Strategies for Community Action

Various strategies for community action have been developed in recent years. But there is a scarcity of factual data on the effectiveness of the different approaches. Some frequently advocated strategies include the following:

A. The Local Audit Approach. One of the possibilities for community action at the local level is the identification of gaps, inadequacies, mismanagement, etc., of the systems that provide services to the poor.

Community strength begins when the residents of the neighborhood are able to: (1) identify the service problems and gaps in terms of their own needs; (2) create broad community concern and consensus around the problem; (3) devise strategies for producing the necessary changes; and (4) take action in order to produce the designated results.

Questions:

1. What are the most promising techniques of "local auditing"? What are ways in which such a program can be both "low-cost" yet comprehensive in its scrutiny of services?

2. Is this approach aided by the employment of residents of the ghetto by service agencies?

3. How should the Federal Government react when such efforts by local citizens meet with resistance from local agencies which receive federal funds? Should some kind of "Inspector General's Office" or other grievance machinery exist to which citizens may turn when calling for needed changes in federally backed programs?

B. Coalition of Groups. Even where Negroes organize for action, they seldom have the resources to successfully press for the fundamental changes in society which are needed to meet the problems of technological unemployment, insufficient housing, inadequate schools, etc. As a variety of groups share an interest in finding solutions for such problems, a logical strategy for mustering sufficient political influence to forward needed programs might lie in forming coalitions of such interest groups.

Questions:

1. What kinds of coalitions might be formed at the local level?

2. To achieve coalition for mutually desired goals, can different interest groups (such as Negroes-labor-poor whites) be united while utilizing divergent techniques?

C. Minority Action Approach. Contrasting with the coalition approach, the strategy of minority action accepts the necessity of community conflict as a means of achieving social change. The minority action view sees the broad coalition approach as necessarily diluting bold action in order to achieve consensus.

Those who favor minority action hold that the action must be taken by those most directly affected by the policies they want to change. They maintain that their community activity must be self-financed, so that it belongs to the local community and is beholden to no one.

Questions:

1. How seriously would use of federal funds inhibit such independent groups?

2. Are there any other outside resources which are compatible with such independent action? What kinds?

3. Should "no strings" grants be given by the Office of Economic Opportunity to such groups for community organization?

4. Are there ways to maintain independence of these groups, yet, if they want either government or private funds, to adequately insure program and staff control?

V. Resources for Community Organization

Earlier questions have dealt with the possibilities of federal contributions to community action. This section will examine other possible resources.

A. Foundations. Foundation funds have been used independently or in conjunction with federal funds to launch many of the major community action programs in the country. In numerous instances, foundations are the exclusive funding resources for experimental and controversial programs.

Questions:

1. How can foundation funds be further utilized to supplement programs also receiving public funds?

2. What are some of the programs of community development for which the foundations are uniquely suited? For instance, should foundations be urged to invest specifically in:

a. the area of leadership training among the poor?

b. community organization programs among poor Negroes in the rural South?

c. legal, technical and management assistance to the non-profit housing corporations to rehabilitate old housing or build new housing for low and moderate income families under section 221 (d) (3) of the Housing Act or under the new rent supplement program?

d. technical and management assistance to community credit unions in low-income neighborhoods?

B. Private Organizations. The private social agencies and organizations have many programs among the poor. Traditionally, these programs have offered health and welfare services financed chiefly by voluntary contributions.

Questions:

1. What potential resources do such agencies have for social action programs?

2. What are the possibilities and implications of Chamber of Commerce and other "establishment" support of these agencies for social action programs among the poor?

C. The Poor Themselves

Questions:

1. How much resource do the poor themselves represent for social action programs?

2. Are the resources of the poor being sufficiently utilized in supporting community organization programs?

D. Regional Resources. Just as problems concerned with transportation, air and water pollution, water and land use, crime control and manpower, are already considered incapable of solution within the boundaries of city or state, many feel that community development in the terms defined here, must also be dealt with on a broader basis. They point out that we shall need bold political experiments which attempt to transcend conventional state and local governing units. It is argued that there needs to be a shift to regional or sub-regional planning and operating agencies. It is anticipated that political and economic resistance to such a shift would be enormous. Indeed, we already see that the customary battle between rural and urban areas is being replaced by new struggles between the suburb and central city.

Questions:

1. In what ways would increased community planning ease the problems faced by the Negro? Is this a major goal -- particularly with regard to desegregating schools, or deconcentrating the ghetto?

2. Shoud pressure for "regional planning" -- for closer coordination of central city and suburb -- be a community action activity?

3. How can the Federal Government encourage regional planning -- for example, through grants of housing or school funds?

4. Does the developing procedure of community action suggest a new role, or new subjects of study and research by colleges and universities? Is there more for them to do in their training of professional personnel and in the development of new techniques of evaluation and research?

* * * * * * * *

November 29, 1965

Mr. Harold Fleming
Executive Vice President
The Potomac Institute
1501 18th Street
Washington, D. C.

Dear Harold:

Would it be too much to have you see that some of the materials and position papers from the recent White House Conference are sent to us? I am particularly interested in those items developed for the Workshop on Jobs, Job Training and Economic Security. It would be good for us to have on file the materials for the other workshops as well. Of course, Paul has those related to education.

I trust life continues frutfully apace. Please give my best regards to staff and family.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program

EFV:js

WHC

PLANNING SESSION
FOR
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

THE COMMUNITY: INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIAL ACTION

December 1965

MEMORANDUM TO LEE C. WHITE

From: Carl Holman
Berl Bernhard
Harold Fleming

Following is a preliminary report on proposals by the panel on The Community: Institutions and Social Action of the Planning Session for the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights." It is based on a report by the director of the committee for the panel, Dr. David Danzig of Columbia University. A final report, based on a thorough study of the transcripts of the two days of meetings, will be submitted to the President by the end of the year. However, because of the seriousness of the problems which the Planning Session discussed, and the sense of urgency of the conferees, we are bringing these preliminary findings to your attention now. They are not all-inclusive; only after a more intensive study of the transcripts can we guarantee that every single suggestion made during the course of the two days comes to the President's attention. Such a study is now underway, and will be embodied in our final report

THE COMMUNITY: INSTITUTIONS AND SOCIAL ACTION
PRELIMINARY REPORT

The session on community was designed to focus upon problems in the context of community action. Because of this wide focus, the participants discussed the full range of Negro problems. Their observations and recommendations frequently dealt with problems of employment, segregation, or housing, as well as community action as such. There was a wide variety of opinion about the obstacles to the development of community action, as indicated in the following quotes from the discussion.

Definitions of Problem

The Social Environment: "...our real concern has to do with recognition that we live in a dual society. A dual housing market, the dual labor market, the dual school system, and even duality before the law--this entire system of duality is what has kept the Negro subjugated...."

Government Support of Discrimination: "....Our problems are mostly in government. We have certain agencies in government that deliberately, systematically, discriminate against various ethnic groups. Members of our organization cannot get a job in certain government agencies....

"....You may describe ineffective community organizations, but you have to start with the Federal Government itself, which perpetuates poverty in many instances....it does by reinforcing poverty, breaking down the family through the way it grants funds to agencies....

"....two-thirds of the industries in Chicago do not hire any non-whites, and with all those defense contracts going in there, this is perpetuating poverty. Because the Federal Government, with $100 billion a year, shores up the economy, and then when they shore it up on the basis of inequality, they are perpetuating poverty....

"....The whole welfare system, you know, many of its practices, outside of its policies, are directed towards making and perpetuating poverty...."

How Effective are Local Organizations: "....how can we, the poor, get our already existing organizations recognized by the white and Negro power structure....

"....most such organizations are much less effective than they are alleged to be, have smaller memberships; they accomplish fewer things; and the goals of community organization are greatly beyond the capacities of community organizations in low-income areas...

....I would like to see this conference give its full support to a change in our public policy on the posture of government to the effect that we recognize the necessity of government giving support to community action programs, social action programs, by providing consultative, professional, adequate resources which will aid the development of local community organizations...."

Neighborhood vs Group as a Basis of Social Organization: ....if we make the compass so big that we use the language 'the poor' alone, then we may lose the sharp focus that we would have by using the word 'Negro'.

....Should the Federal Government, for instance, fund a social agency to do something [for] the poor, a church to do something for the poor, or a unit of government to apply some kind of sop, or should it fund a unit of the population, a geographical unit....

....How far, for example, should we go in encouraging and stimulating purely racial organizations and institutions in the Negro community, regarding them not as ultimate goals, perhaps, but as interim mechanisms whereby you develop the sense of community, the sense of strength, the sense of power, and the actual fact of power.

Should Negroes get together as Negroes, for example, and develop purely Negro institutions as a stepping stone to achieving the respect and the power which alone, in my judgment, can lead to their creative activity and creative movement across a broad range....

....Who is the neighborhood? And should the neighborhood in Harlem be Harlem Negroes organized as Negroes, with Negro banks, with Negro trade unions perhaps, with any number of a range of all-Negro institutions drawing upon the sense of racial identity as one of its major sources of strength....?

Will OEO Community Action Programs Develop Political and Economic Power in Local Groups: "....policies like the 'maximum feasible participation' of the poor are absolutely meaningless, in terms of the practice of the Office of Economic Opportunity....

....I am at least in part convinced that the Poverty Program, far from securing the involvement of the poor in any meaningful way, will impede their organization; for one thing, the Poverty Program is going to consist largely of the expansion of professional bureaucracies of various sorts. These youth unemployment programs, Head Start programs, are essentially professional programs. They are huge, bureaucratically-organized, professionally-dominated programs, no matter who sits on the council or board that makes general policy for them. In view of the fact that they are likely to exert their influence in ways to secure from their clientele not militant action but relative docility, so as not to disrupt the flow of resources to their professional, bureaucratic operations....

....I don't think that OEO directly, unless it established either through its office of inspection or something -- that you have to have some kind of separate government arm, rather like the NLRB, which has the responsibility solely of policing this relationship which the community can turn to and ask for assistance when it feels that a local government agency is not giving it adequate recognition....

....if a Community Action Program can negotiate with the Board of Education to carry out a "Head Start" Program, why can it not negotiate with a group in Syracuse, New York, to carry out some other kind of program? If it can negotiate with some family agency to carry on a program dealing with family problems, why can't it not negotiate in South Los Angeles with a group that really represents that neighborhood?....

RECOMMENDATIONS

(The panel's recommendations represent the majority opinion that the White House conference did not present the proper forum for discussion of the specifics of strategy and tactics by various local groups. The recommendations assume a certain level of community action, and go beyond that to discuss the relationship between community action and government at all levels.)

I. RECOMMENDATIONS WHICH HAD SUBSTANTIAL SUPPORT

The following appeared to have the support of most of the panel members. There was general agreement that organization was necessary to building Negro power in the community--and that power was essential to improving the Negro position in society.

Panel members felt that on the whole current use of federal funds leads to the strengthening of established bureaucracies on the state and city levels, and that neighborhood groups derive little amount of resources or political influence from them. The power position of low-income groups, particularly Negro communities, is not being significantly altered by these federal programs. It was recommended that the Federal Government should:

1. Discard policies which weaken and discriminate against low-income minority communities; and provide jobs and careers which recognize the abilities of the people of such areas, and

2. Support the development of autonomous, democratic, powerful, mass organizations of minority low-income communities by:

a. legislation which makes it practicable for such organizations to become bargaining agents with the institutions controlled from outside the Negro community;

b. training of organizers to create and lead such organizations;

c. allowing such organizations to secure funds directly from the Federal Government and other sources to operate their own programs.

3. New ways of funneling federal resources into communities should be found that will by-pass the "establishments" which siphon off such resources to the advantage of their own institutions:

a. Federal grants and subsidies might be given directly to community organizations;

b. The principle of "maximum feasible participation: could also be extended to agencies such as Job Corps, and others;

c. New corporate structures such as consumer corporates, credit bureaus, and other might be experimented with, utilizing direct federal subsidies.

4. The Federal Government should assume responsibility for seeing that the rights of existing local indigenous groups are recognized. City-wide, regional and state organizations should be required to be more responsive to the demands of indigenous local organizations and institutions. In general, the channels through which federal funds flow to communities from regional and state agencies should be re-examined to see whether these moneys are dispersed in such a fashion as to undermine and weaken indigenous groups.

II. RECOMMENDATIONS BY ONE OR MORE PANELISTS

A. FEDERAL GOVERNMENT AND LOCAL GROUPS

1. The Government should adopt as a matter of policy, as it has with trade unions, the encouragement of the development of community action groups, which can autonomously negotiate and conduct programs.

2. All people working with the Job Corps, Neighborhood Youth Corps, social work, recreation, etc., should work through, under, or with already established local community groups in the effected communities.

B. FEDERAL SPONSORSHIP OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS AMONG NEGROES - THE RURAL SOUTH

The Federal Government should:

1. Buy up large allotments of land in the South and make that land available at a charitable rate to "No-income" and low-income people who are trying to escape from indentured existences as sharecroppers and plantation workers in a politically and economically hostile environment.

2. The Federal Government would underwrite or finance "community neighborhood corporations" among "no-income" and low-income southern rural Negroes as they attempt to acquire land, build homes, establish businesses and community services and escape their traditionally indentured lives. Capital investments in businesses and institutions owned and run by these communities is one suggested method of assistance.

C. THE DEPARTMENT OF HOUSING AND URBAN DEVELOPMENT

1. The Department should concern itself not only with housing, but also with social planning in a much broader sense in communities.

2. National housing policy should encompass programs of regional planning covering both city and suburb, and also "New Towns" program.

D. THE COMMUNITY RELATIONS SERVICE

The Community Relations Service should be enlarged and strengthened. The Community Relations Service has demonstrated effectiveness in fostering organization in the Negro community, and this should be continued and encouraged.

E. ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW CABINET-LEVEL DEPARTMENT

There should be established a Department of Decolonization at the cabinet level. This department should oversee Federal policies which will transfer the resources of the black ghettoes of the United States into the hands of the local people.

F. STATE OF "NATIONAL DISASTER" IN NEGRO COMMUNITY

1. The Negro community, because of its political and economic status, should be declared a "national disaster area," and the Federal Government should provide massive aid, working in cooperation with existing and/or emerging indigenous organizations.

2. Considering the disastrous state of unemployment among Negro males and the conditions of substandard housing in Negro ghetto areas (and in southern rural Negro communities) massive programs for the construction and rehabilitation of housing should be begun, providing employment, the development of marketable skills, needed income and more and better housing for Negroes.

G. NEW MINIMUM WAGE LAW

A higher minimum wage should be sought, as the current rate of $1.25 per hour provides less than the recognized minimum subsistence income of $3000 annually.

H. GOVERNMENT POLICIES TO END DISCRIMINATION

The Government should enlarge its machinery and resources for limiting discrimination in all types of businesses which furnish services and which would not normally fall within the range of its contract compliance program.

I. BANKING OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO HELP THE POOR

Federal funds, especially OEO funds to local CAPs, should not be placed in banks which discriminate against Negroes or which do not offer employment and training opportunities to the poor.

J. LONG-RANGE FEDERAL PLANNING

The various massive programs suggested here are important, but they are only transitional proposals as we move out of an economy of scarcity into an economy of abundance. Therefore, after massive programs are scheduled to close present gaps, the Federal Government has to encourage a new kind of cultural, educational, political practice program, in which people who will be freed from the tyranny of burdensome work, who will have a lot more leisure, should be encouraged to minister to each other.

Federal policy should reach the point where the Government can guarantee a family income to all of the people and present welfare policies will be unnecessary.

SUMMARY

The Community: Institutions and Social Action

The community action problems considered by this panel overlapped broadly into the areas discussed by almost all of the other panels. Consideration was given to the "dual system" of housing, employment, education, services, and justice which has kept the Negro "subjugated." The proposals advanced by the panel focused upon these problems in the context of community action:

A. Relationship Between the Federal Government and Local Groups.

1. Overcoming the use of federal funds to strengthen the established bureaucracy on the state and city levels in such a way that the power position of low income Negro groups is not significantly altered by federal programs.

2. Support for the development of autonomous democratic mass organizations of minority low-income groups by: (a) legislation making it practicable for such organizations to become bargaining agents with the institutions controlled from outside the Negro communities; and (b) training of organizers to create and lead such organizations.

3. Developing new ways of funneling federal resources into communities while by-passing the "establishment" which siphons off such resources to the advantage of their own institutions:

   a. Giving federal grants and subsidies directly to community organizations.

   b. Extending the principal of "maximum feasible participation" to agencies such as the Job Corps and others.

   c. Experimenting with new corporate structures such as consumer corporations and credit bureaus, utilizing direct federal subsidies.

B. Federal Sponsorship of Community Development Projects Among Negroes in the Rural South.

1. Purchase by the federal government of large allotments of land in the South and making that land available at a charitable rate to no-income and low-income people who are trying to escape from indentured existences as share croppers and plantation workers.

2. Federal underwriting or financing of "community neighborhood corporations" among southern rural Negroes enabling them to acquire land, build homes and establish business and community services.

C. Improvement of Existing Federal Services.

1. Focusing concern of the Department of Housing and Urban Development upon social planning in a broad sense as well as housing in a narrow sense; establishing a national housing policy that encompasses programs of regional planning covering cities, suburbs and "new towns."

2. Enlarging and strengthening the Community Relations Service.

3. Increase of the minimum wage to recognize that the current $1.25 per hour provides less than the recognized minimum subsistence income of $3,000 annually.

4. Enlargement of the government machinery and resources for limiting discrimination in all types of businesses which furnish services and which would not normally fall within the range of its contract compliance program.

5. Placing federal funds (especially OEO funds to local CAPs) in banks which do not discriminate against Negroes and which offer employment training opportunities to the poor.

6. Federal policy directed at ultimately guaranteeing a family income to all people, thus making present welfare policies unnecessary.

Unemployment Politics
Empl. Disc.

Industrial Relations
Research Association

PROCEEDINGS OF THE 1965 SPRING MEETING

Buffalo, New York
May 3 and 4, 1965

Reprint Series

The Public Employment Service

LEONARD P. ADAMS

Number 165

NEW YORK STATE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRIAL AND LABOR RELATIONS, A Contract College of the State University, CORNELL UNIVERSITY, ITHACA, NEW YORK

A REPORT

ON

THE 1966 PLANS FOR PROGRESS

FOURTH NATIONAL CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON HILTON HOTEL

JANUARY 24-25, 1966

File

EU

MB

Toward a New Federal Equal Employment Opportunity Program*

By John Feild

Twenty-five years ago the Federal Government embarked upon its first systematic effort to eliminate racial discrimination in private employment. President Roosevelt's historic Executive Order Number 8802, applicable to holders of government war contracts, issued June 21, 1941, was to be followed by a sequence of similar orders issued by each president that has succeeded him. In the intervening years, the legislatures of 31 states and over 100 cities were to crystalize governmental policy within their jurisdictions in an increasingly determined effort to achieve equality of opportunity in employment for all citizens regardless of race, creed, or national origin. Congress, in July of 1964, broadened the Federal interest in equal employment opportunity from just those employers holding government contracts

* Prepared for the third Notre Dame Conference on Civil Rights, Notre Dame Law School, February 17-20, 1966.

NATIONAL CATHOLIC CONFERENCE FOR INTERRACIAL JUSTICE

Employment SERVICES DEPARTMENT bulletin

PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY PROJECT EQUALITY

February 1966

Thomas H. Gibbons, Jr. / Director of Employment Services

"At the core of Oakland's plight is unemployment. Federal visitors to West Oakland, a ghetto area in which nearly 63% of the 77,100 population is Negro, say they're bombarded by the plea, 'We want jobs, jobs, jobs.' The official report declares: 'Unemployment is very high among Negroes; it is approximately 10% for whites, about 20% or more for Negroes and even higher for Negro youth.'"

Monroe W. Karmin, Staff Reporter
Wall Street Journal of January 6, 1966

ASSOCIATE DIRECTOR OF EMPLOYMENT SERVICES APPOINTED

Mr. Curtis Heaston of Chicago has been appointed Associate Director of the Employment Services Department of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice. In his new position Mr. Heaston will function as Assistant National Program Director for PROJECT EQUALITY. This brings the national coordinating staff for PROJECT EQUALITY to three persons. After an initial period of work in the national offices, Mr. Heaston will begin to service existing PROJECT EQUALITY programs in the United States. Later this year he will begin to install new PROJECT EQUALITY programs. Conference Executive Director Ahmann said the increase in national staff was necessitated by the growing demand for PROJECT EQUALITY by Roman Catholic, Protestant, Jewish and Orthodox jurisdictions across the country. Mr. Heaston comes to his new position from a socio-legal background, leaving a position as assistant attorney general for the State of Illinois. He is a graduate of the Loyola University (Chicago) Schools of Business and of Law.

PROJECT EQUALITY ADVISORY COUNCIL FORMED

An Advisory Council for PROJECT EQUALITY to assist the national program staff in policy-making and in coordination of the various local programs which are growing at an increasing rate across the United States, has been established at the national offices in Chicago. Members are named to the Advisory Council by each religious jurisdiction participating in the national program. Twenty-six Advisory Council members and guests have been invited to attend the first meeting to be held in Chicago on March 4, 1966. They will represent the various Roman Catholic, Jewish, Orthodox, and Protestant denominations and jurisdictions participating in PROJECT EQUALITY nationally.

1307 SOUTH WABASH AVENUE • CHICAGO, ILLINOIS 60605 • Area Code 312—341-1530

572

AFL-CIO

Transmittal Slip

DATE:

TO: Mr. Paul Anthony EV

FROM: Nat Goldfinger

☐ Note and File	☐ Prepare Reply For My Signature
☐ Note and Return To Me	☐ Take Appropriate Action
☐ Return With More Details	☐ Per Your Request
☐ Note and See Me About This	☐ Signature
☐ Please Answer	☐ Advice Please
☐ For Your Approval	☐ Attach Complete File and Return

COMMENTS:

For your information.

WHC

STATEMENT OF ANDREW J. BIEMILLER
DIRECTOR, DEPARTMENT OF LEGISLATION
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS BEFORE A JOINT HEARING OF
THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON EMPLOYMENT AND MANPOWER AND
THE HOUSE SELECT SUBCOMMITTEE ON LABOR

March 17, 1966

My name is Andrew J. Biemiller. I am director of legislation for the AFL-CIO.

At every opportunity, the AFL-CIO has expressed itself in support of measures to strengthen the public employment service of this nation. We have done so because we firmly believe that an effective service is essential to the needs of a rapidly-changing, highly mobile, industrialized economy. We are, therefore, pleased to have this opportunity to express ourselves once again on this most important issue, and I wish to thank the two subcommittees for extending this invitation to us.

It is no secret that the AFL-CIO believes that the public employment service should be federalized. It has long been our view that the problems confronting us in regard to the development of an effective public employment service -- one that truly measures up to our needs -- would disappear with the federalization of the present system. We have said this repeatedly and, I might add, before subcommittees chaired by the same gentlemen who chair the two subcommittees before which I am appearing today.

Back in 1961, when he appeared before the House Subcommittee on Unemployment and the Impact of Automation, chaired by Congressman Holland, our then-research director, Stanley Ruttenberg, who is now the Manpower Administrator, said that he "would like to see federalization of the U. S. Employment Service."

In 1963, when I testified for the AFL-CIO at hearings of the Senate Subcommittee on Employment and Manpower, which was then, as now, chaired by Senator Clark, I said that we needed "a nation-wide employment service around which all manpower activities revolve." I went on to say that "one of the major stumbling blocks to an effective public employment service ... is the type of federal-state relationship to which we still cling in the manpower area."

Everything that has happened since reinforces our view on this issue. Just three months ago, the AFL-CIO reinterated this position in support of federalization in a resolution on manpower policy which was adopted unanimously by our Convention. I have attached to my statement the full text of that resolution.

There are many others who share our view on the issue of federalization. Only recently, the National Commission on Technology, Automation, and Economic Progress joined the list when, in its report to the President, it recommended that the public employment service become a wholly federal agency.

I am not unmindful of the absence of a similar recommendation by the Secretary of Labor's Employment Service Task Force. Clearly, however, that group seemed to address itself primarily to the need to improve the operations of the employment service within the general framework of the existing institutional relationships. It did not -- as the Commission on Automation did -- examine the overall needs of our economy. Such was not its charter.

If one examines the nature of our economy, and relates to it the needs of the workers as well as those of the employers, the need to federalize the employment service is the only conclusion that logic permits. We have a national economy; not 50 different economies (nor 54, which is the figure if we add in the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, Guam and the Virgin Islands). And since our economy is national in scope, we need a national approach to all of our manpower activities, especially in the public employment service which is the most crucial element of all.

In short, it makes little sense to talk about national manpower policies, in a highly-integrated, mobile and national economy, and then to turn over to the 50 individual states the major role in the operation of the program that is most critical in the manpower area.

None of this is to say that legislation before these subcommittees would not represent forward progress. Even S. 3032 and H. R. 13362, which represent the views of the Administration, is an effort to improve the existing program. But having said this, I must hasten to add that, in our judgment, it leaves much to be desired -- too much to warrant our support.

In our opinion, S. 2974 and H.R. 13037, the so-called Clark-Holland bill, is far superior to the Administration's bill. And while it may not provide the federalization we advocate, it is designed to deal more effectively with some of the basic problems -- much more so than would the Administration bill.

It is not my intention to present a section-by-section analysis of either the Clark-Holland bill or the Administration bill. Rather, I propose to discuss some of the major problem areas with which the AFL-CIO is concerned and to indicate why we think the Clark-Holland bill is, with the exception of one provision, preferable to the Administration bill. I intend also to make some suggestions for changes in the Clark-Holland bill.

Federal-State Relationship

First and foremost in our minds is the issue of the federal-state relationship in the operation of the employment service. In our judgment, this is at the root of the problem, and has much to do with our continuing inability to achieve the kind of employment service so many observers would like to have. We think, however, that many of these same observers refuse to face the fact that, given the nature of our economy, a really effective public employment service cannot be achieved without some basic changes in the federal-state relationship in the employment service field.

We think the Administration bill suffers from this weakness -- from this failure to recognize this reality -- and it is a basic defect. Thus, the Administration bill is, in effect, an effort to paper over the weak spots in the present system. It simply does not come to grips with the problems but, instead, seems for the most part to be a reaffirmation of what is already going on.

On the other hand, the Clark-Holland bill seeks to deal with some of the fundamental issues. It first imposes on the Secretary of Labor the obligation to establish and operate a public employment service. It goes on from there to authorize the Secretary to enter into agreements with the states for the purposes of operations within each state. Moreover, in the event of non-performance, it grants the Secretary the authority to withhold funds, not only for the entire operation within any state, but for those parts of the operation which do not measure up to standards called for in the agreement.

This authority to withhold funds in part is important because, as many of the experts have pointed out, the Secretary has had no alternative to the extreme penalty of cutting off completely the funds for any state's employment service operation. This provision of the Clark-Holland bill -- Section 11 (c) -- will permit him to be selective and is, we feel, a very useful tool. The language of Section 12 of the Administration bill seems also to seek to deal with this problem in this fashion.

In another important respect, however, the Administration bill misses the target. This has to do with the salaries of state personnel employed in public employment service operations.

Most observers seem to agree that this salary issue is critical. In order to attract and retain people with the right qualifications, decent salaries have to be offered. But the vicious cycle, in which we have been trapped by the existing federal-state employment service system, has locked the salaries of these state employees -- though paid by federal funds -- into the salary structures of the states. For the most part, these are generally quite low.

The Administration bill would, when all is said and done, do little about this problem. It seeks to handle this matter through the Secretary's authority to approve the states' plans.

The Clark-Holland bill is much more specific and to the point. In Section 10(a) it authorizes the Secretary to prescribe minimum salary rates for such state employees, providing as standards "the rates paid in [each] state for similar work in both public and private employment."

Contracts for Services

Both the Clark-Holland bill and the Administration bill would permit contracting with public or private agencies for the performance of employment service functions. We have no objection to contracting for purposes of research work or experimental projects of a research character, or even perhaps special counseling and testing problems.

But we do object strenuously to any proposal to contract out to private employment agencies the placement function of the public employment service under any conditions. In our view the placement activity of the public employment service belongs in the public employment service, and no place else. Should it be necessary, as the Clark-Holland bill seems to contemplate, that the Secretary may need to provide placement services that a state will not, or cannot, perform properly, then we would suggest that in his right to contract he be limited to nonprofit agencies which should be required to meet standards specified in regulations.

This is an issue we do not take lightly. Quite frankly, we are appalled at the provision in the Administration's bill which would provide a blanket authorization -- even though subject to the Secretary's approval -- for states to enter into agreements with private employment agencies for just about any and all activities.

I must remind this hearing of the lack of effective regulation that exists with regard to private employment agencies. Not only are there no federal laws, and not only do six states have no laws, but of the 44 states that have some degree of regulation it has recently been pointed out that 15 do not require an agency operator to present evidence of good character to obtain a license.

24 do not require an agency to be operated in suitable premises as a prerequisite for obtaining a license.

11 do not provide for the regulation of registration fees (fees collected before any service is rendered to the applicant).

15 do not regulate the maximum placement fees which may be charged.

16 do not prohibit the referral of a worker to employment without having a bona fide order.

29 do not prohibit private employment agencies from sending applicants to jobs where their employment will be in violation of any law.

17 do not require notifying the worker that a labor dispute exists at the place of employment to which he is referred.

13 do not prohibit the splitting of fees between an agency and an employer.

Moreover, I would like to call to your attention the problem of enforcement of equal employment opportunity policies where the private employment agencies are concerned. They can be -- and have been -- used by employers intent on circumventing such laws. On July 31, 1963, for example, the New York Times reported that, on surveys conducted in six cities by the American Jewish Congress, more than 90 percent of the private employment agencies accepted discriminatory job orders -- and each of the six cities was in a state which had an anti-discrimination statute on its books. The cities covered by the survey were Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Boston, Detroit and Philadelphia.

Clearly, it will take more than rules and regulations by the Secretary of Labor to straighten out the performance of these private employment agencies, since they have obviously not hesitated to flout the anti-discrimination laws of the states in their pursuit of profit. We do not think such performance merits consideration as potential government contractors.

Separation of the Employment Service

We have long favored a separation of the employment service operations from the activities relating to unemployment insurance. Thus, the steps that have been taken in recent years to separate physically the local public employment offices from the claims offices have had our support. It is, in our opinion, the fact that these operations have usually been combined which has led so often to the public employment office to be characterized as "the unemployment office." With such an image, it is not at all surprising that the service has had difficulty attracting clients -- from among workers or employers -- for the more-skilled positions.

Too many people have a view that the only, or major, function of the local office is unemployment insurance. For this reason a separation of the two operations continues to be imperative if we are to develop an effective public employment service which provides a wide range of services. This has absolutely nothing to do with the relative importance of the two programs. Both the unemployment insurance activities and the employment service activities are essential, of course. They are, however, different programs.

We are pleased to see that both the Clark-Holland bill and the Administration bill address themselves to this need for separation. However, as is the case in other crucial areas, the Clark-Holland bill seems to us to go more to the root of the problem. It not only tackles the issue of physical separation of the offices at the local level, but it seeks -- in proposing the creation of a Bureau of Manpower Services in the Department of Labor -- to establish this separation, clearly and unmistakably, at the federal level as well.

Moreover, by its proposal to make the National Manpower Advisory Committee, which was created by the Manpower Development and Training Act, advisory to the BMS, the Clark-Holland bill would help to unify and rationalize the manpower activities of the federal government. There is a great community of interest between the training function of the Department of Labor and the Department's employment service activities -- much more than exists between the employment service and the unemployment insurance activities. As a practical matter, the only real administrative tie that exists here -- between the employment service and the unemployment insurance functions -- stems from the administration of the so-called work test which the employment service handles. However, we do not see the work test as a sufficient reason to lock together administratively the entire employment service structure and the unemployment insurance program. The work test is too small a part of the total employment service activity -- or at least, it should be -- to lead to this end result. It is a good example of the tail wagging the dog.

State and Local Advisory Committees

While we are inclined to favor the proposal of the Clark-Holland bill with regard to the role of the National Manpower Advisory Committee vis-a-vis the BMS, we are troubled by its omission of concrete proposals with regard to state and local advisory committees. As our experience with the Manpower Development and Training Act has shown, positive and rather specific language is needed to assure the development of a body of advisory committees at the state and local levels -- and we firmly believe that such committees are essential.

Any effort to improve and upgrade the quality of the public employment service should take into account the constructive role that can be played by the citizens -- representing labor, business and other groups. It seems to us that, in order to facilitate the ability of the public employment service operations to penetrate more deeply into the life of each community, and thus to make its maximum contribution, we should press hard for broadly-based advisory committees at all levels of government. It would increase the service's contacts, expose it more readily to the needs of the people it is intended to serve and, in addition, make available to the service on a regular basis expert advise -- from labor, management, and others -- that might not otherwise be forthcoming.

We would suggest, therefore, that the Clark-Holland bill be changed to incorporate the type of language that exists in the Manpower Development and Training Act, wherein committees at the state and local level are a requirement. We would like to see such committees -- preferably the MDTA advisory committees -- in every state and in every labor market area -- I repeat, each labor market area, and not each community. Setting them up according to labor-market area would reinforce our efforts to have the public employment service, in conducting its activities, think in terms of economic boundaries rather than the political boundaries which bear little or no relationship to the patterns of economic activity.

Strikes and Lockouts

We are unqualifiedly opposed to having the public employment service aid employers to break strikes or reinforce their lockouts. We oppose, therefore, any procedure which would permit the service to refer applicants to employers whose workers are on strike, and we also oppose the approval of training programs for openings which exist because the regular workers are on strike. We believe the policy of the public employment service ought to be clear and airtight on this issue.

We do not believe the Clark-Holland bill covers the problem adequately and, therefore, we support the general language of the Administration bill. As a matter of fact, as we read it, the language in the Administration bill is nothing more than present policy as expressed in existing regulations.

Development of Employment Opportunities

Section 4 and Section 5 of the Clark-Holland bill talk about the development of "opportunities for public service employment." We would like to see the language improved so that the bill is clear on intent.

We believe that there is a need to expand public employment, both to provide jobs and to provide much-needed public services. Moreover, we believe that an important weapon would be added to the employment service's arsenal if it were in a position to finance the cost of placing unemployed workers into public service jobs.

We would, of course, be concerned about the standards -- the wage issue, for one, and the need to make sure that incumbent workers are not displaced -- just as we have been concerned about this matter in connection with the job-creation parts of the anti-poverty program.

But we endorse the general principle -- as an aid to the workers and to the communities, but also as a sound approach for increasing the overall effectiveness of the public employment service. As I said earlier, however, we think the language warrants some sharpening.

Relocation Allowances

The absence of a provision for relocation allowances strikes us as a serious omission from both the Clark-Holland bill and the Administration bill. This is all the more so when we consider one of the main thrusts of the two bills -- they are both seeking to improve the operations of the public employment service with regard to inter-area clearance, and thus to improve mobility. They both, for example, are concerned with the need to use more up-to-date equipment and to develop the administrative structure that will facilitate the ability of the public employment service to work more effectively in matching workers and jobs without regard to geography.

For this effort to succeed -- and I want to emphasize that we are talking about voluntary relocation, and that no one should be forced to move against his wishes -- we think that financial assistance is required.

It costs money for a worker to move -- for he must move his family and his furnishings, and he will invariably incur additional expenses in starting life in a new house, in a strange community. His willingness to move -- to take a job at some distant place -- is to society's advantage, and we believe that society ought to be willing to share some of the financial burdens.

Logic ought to tell us that, other things being equal, more workers would be interested in moving if they have financial assistance than if they do not. And if the intention of the legislation is to improve the tools available to the employment service to perform its function as the central manpower agency, then we should not hesitate to provide the service with the necessary funds and instruments with which to do its job.

****

I think it is clear from our statement, Mr. Chairman, that we support the aims of the legislation being considered by this joint hearing. We find that, on balance, the Clark-Holland bill would provide a cure for more of the ills of the public employment service than would the Administration bill.

In closing, I would like to reiterate that it has been my intention to cover some of the more troublesome areas. I have not gone into many of the details of either bill, all of which deal with matters that are essential to a well-rounded employment service program.

To a large extent, they deal with services and programs that already exist, but that do not operate as effectively as most of us would like. And perhaps more than anything else, this fact alone is the most eloquent testimony to the need to do something basic about the employment service structure.

The problem is urgent, and therefore this hearing is timely. It is the earnest hope of the AFL-CIO that these two subcommittees will adopt a bill that will not provide simply a new veneer.

It is time now for some basic renovation.

RESOLUTION ON MANPOWER POLICY

Adopted by the AFL-CIO Convention
San Francisco, California
December 9-15, 1965

America's most pressing need in its effort to achieve an effective manpower policy is jobs. Programs to expand training activities and to improve employment services, although essential, are an inadequate substitute for job opportunities. Such programs help workers to adjust to changed needs and changed conditions but cannot, by themselves, lead to full employment. And it is full employment which is the primary requirement of national manpower policy.

So long as the nation continues to suffer high levels of unemployment, it cannot have a meaningful manpower policy. True, it can have manpower programs, as indeed we have had during the past four years. But in the absence of full employment, these programs can make only a small contribution to the needs of the workers and the nation.

Full employment is the keystone of a national manpower policy by providing job opportunities for all persons who are willing and able to work. And full employment would provide the needed stimulus for employers to expand company and industry training programs - the traditional way in which manpower skills have been upgraded.

Nevertheless, except for the fact that they have been viewed by some observers as the sole or major answer to the nation's problem of joblessness, the developments in manpower programs over the last four years are encouraging. They provide substantial evidence that government policy makers have become increasingly concerned with the impact of automation and technological change on jobs, on people and on our communities. And although most of the programs are not on a scale that matches the magnitude of the problems - and although they do not represent a panacea - they represent moves in the right direction.

Through programs of federal financial aid to all levels of education, young people will have an improved chance to enter the job market better prepared for work in the modern world.

Through federal legislation to provide training and retraining, many of the unemployed and under-employed are now being given the opportunity to equip themselves for new and changing job requirements.

Through federal programs to aid depressed communities, efforts are being made to bring more jobs into areas where unemployment is excessively high. Moreover, experimental programs are in process to provide financial assistance to bring unemployed workers into areas of job opportunities.

As part of the war on poverty, jobs and training opportunities are being given to poor people, especially the young.

And, in an effort to upgrade the quality of the Federal-State Employment Service, increased funds have been made available to expand its services - to increase its counseling and placement activities and its assistance to all groups of workers and to all employers. Particularly noteworthy is the effort of the public employment service to strengthen its program for young people, through the creation of Youth Opportunity Centers.

Despite these new programs and expanded activities, all of which are sorely needed, the United States still lacks a broad national approach to what is essentially a national manpower problem. The tendency is still to view manpower problems, and to operate manpower programs, primarily as local activities. This inevitably weakens the effectiveness of these programs and activities, as indeed has been the case in connection with two major manpower programs - the operation of the public employment service and the administration of the Manpower Development and Training Act.

The public employment service, which must provide the underpinning for all of our manpower activities, is not a national system. It is in fact, 50 different state systems and, as presently structured, it inhibits efforts to establish an effective national approach, or even a regional approach, to manpower problems. As presently operated, the public employment service even fractures local job markets because its activities are patterned after the boundary lines of communities, rather than the realistic boundary lines of economic activities and job markets.

The result of this type of operation is to deny the fullest assistance possible to workers and employers alike. It can keep from the worker, essential information about job opportunities that are available within commuting distance of his home, and it can keep from the employer the opportunity to make his choice from as wide a list as possible.

Moreover, the present orientation of the public employment service affects adversely the operations of training activities because it is the service which makes the basic decision of who is to train and for what. Too often that decision is based on conditions in a particular local community, without regard to manpower conditions that may exist in other communities, even within the same job market area. There is, for example, no real effort made to search out the unemployed workers in nearby areas who may already have the skill for which a training program is to be undertaken.

This has led to the development of training programs that should not have been undertaken, including some which have infringed on longstanding apprenticeship programs, adversely affecting the employment opportunities of workers already possessing the needed skills and endangering the standards of wages and working conditions built up by organized labor's efforts over the years.

In addition, we are mindful of the fact that the present operations of the Manpower Development and Training Act may be training unemployed workers for job opportunities that properly belong to those already on an employer's payroll. To whatever extent an unemployed worker may be trained for a job above the lowest skill grade in a plant, the training program may be depriving an incumbent employee in that lower skill grade - many of whom are nonwhite - from advancing.

As a consequence, while considerable progress has been made, in recent years, in the field of manpower programs, much more remains to be done - including, above all else, a recognition of the need for a substantial increase in the number of job opportunities to achieve and sustain full employment. Therefore, be it

RESOLVED: 1. We urge that the employment service be federalized. Only through a truly national employment agency can the employment service meet the needs of workers and employers in our modern economy which transcends local and state boundaries and is national in scope.

Until such time as federalization is accomplished, we urge the following steps be taken immediately to improve the capability and effectiveness of the public employment service in assisting workers find jobs and advance occupationally:

(a) Restructure and strengthen the public employment service so that its offices can penetrate more deeply into job market activities and operate as true manpower centers. Measures should be taken to assure that the public employment service will pattern its activities long the lines of economic activities and not be hemmed in by community boundary lines, and will utilize the most up-to-date electronic data processing equipment.

(b) As a major step in improving the quality of the service, and upgrading the entire system, we urge that steps be taken to induce the states to raise the salaries of personnel engaged in employment service activities. By and large, the present salaries are not adequate to attract, and keep, the well-qualified people who are essential to assure that the very important tasks assigned to the employment services will be carried out effectively.

(c) Encourage all employers to list job vacancies with the public employment service so that the service can function more effectively. We urge the President to issue an Executive Order requiring all government contractors, although free to hire from any source, to list all of their job vacancies with the public employment service, providing, however, where union hiring halls or other union-management arrangements are in operation, these shall be acceptable in lieu of listing with the public employment service.

(d) The U.S. Employment Service should exercise its authority to set standards for all the 50 state employment systems and should be given effective enforcement tools to assure that performance will meet those standards.

(e) We urge that more federal funds be made available, including funds from general revenues, to provide more financial assistance to the public employment service to enable it to expand and improve its service to more workers and employees in line with these recommendations.

2. We urge the Manpower Administrator, who is responsible for the operation of the manpower programs of the Department of Labor, to administer the activities under the MDTA as a national program, rather than as a series of individual local community programs. Only in this way will the retraining program be able to avoid the pitfalls of training workers for occupations in which there are already unemployed workers, frequently in communities adjacent to those in which training programs are being developed for the occupation.

3. We urge that all federally-supported training activities, regardless of the agency responsible for administration, be coordinated through the Manpower Administration in the Department of Labor. With the proliferation of programs that has been developing, there is danger of duplication and overlap. Moreover, agencies without expertise in all phases of the job market are not in a position to identify skill needs adequately and to be reasonably sure of successful placement of the trainees.

4. We urge the Manpower Administrator to give special attention to the inequities that result from the failure of MDTA programs to place priority on upgrading workers already on an employer's payroll. To this end, we urge expansion of on-the-job training activities for incumbent employes.

5. We urge that the Manpower Administrator examine the extent to which local and state advisory committees, required under MDTA, are being effectively utilized. We believe that the proper use of the expert advice represented on these committees can be an invaluable tool for the program administrators. And we also urge the Manpower Administrator to refuse approval of funds for projects, where advisory committees do not exist or where they are not truly representative of all groups, including organized labor.

6. We urge the enactment of legislation which will effectively curtail discrimination on account of age. While a number of programs have been developed to meet the needs of youth, and to eliminate discrimination based on color, sex, and national origin, little has been done to provide protection to older workers. This is a waste of human resources which should not be tolerated in any society seeking full employment and a rational manpower policy.

AFL-CIO

Transmittal Slip

DATE: March 30, 1966

TO: Mr. P. Anthony

FROM: Nat Goldfinger

☐ Note and File	☐ Prepare Reply For My Signature
☐ Note and Return To Me	☐ Take Appropriate Action
☐ Return With More Details	☐ Per Your Request
☐ Note and See Me About This	☐ Signature
☐ Please Answer	☐ Advice Please
☐ For Your Approval	☐ Attach Complete File and Return

COMMENTS:

For your information.

WHC

EV

STATEMENT OF NATHANIEL GOLDFINGER, DIRECTOR, DEPARTMENT OF RESEARCH
AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AND CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS
BEFORE A HEARING OF THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON FISCAL POLICY OF THE JOINT ECONOMIC COMMITTEE ON
PROMPT TAX CHANGES FOR ECONOMIC STABILIZATION

March 22, 1966

At the outset, I would like to congratulate the Joint Economic Committee and this Subcommittee for holding these hearings on the important current issue of tax changes for economic stabilization.

As I see it, the subject of these hearings cannot be discussed properly in a vacuum. Therefore, I shall attempt to deal with it, within the context of the current economic situation.

I believe that current economic developments and trends require elimination of the 7 percent tax-credit for business investment in new equipment or an increase in corporate taxes, through an excess profits tax or an increase in the corporate tax rate -- to curb the very sharp rise of business investment in new plant and equipment.

If such action is not taken in the coming weeks, the need to restrain the clearly out-of-line and unsustainable rise of business outlays for new plants and machines may become more urgent.

There are uncertainties about the economic picture. For example, it may become necessary to provide a further boost to military spending. Or the demand for goods and services may be expanding at a considerably faster pace than was expected at the beginning of the year.

Under such conditions, a prompt increase of corporate taxes would be needed to dampen down the pressures from the one-sector capital goods boom that arises largely from skyrocketing profits -- through a combination of measures, involving elimination of the 7 percent tax-credit for business investment in new equipment and/or an excess profits tax, and/or an increase in the corporate tax rate.

The wisest course, in my opinion, would be elimination of the 7 percent tax-credit now. If there was ever any justification for this government subsidy of business investment in 1962, to stimulate outlays for new business equipment when such outlays were low in the early 1960s, then, there is a powerful argument for elimination of this subsidy at present.

We are in the third year of an unsustainable capital goods boom and the government's most recent reports indicate an even sharper rise of business outlays for new plant and equipment in 1966, than was anticipated at the beginning of the year. Moreover, this out-of-line capital goods boom is picking up steam, in an economy which already has the economic stimulus of the Vietnam conflict.

Although there are no general inflationary pressures in the economy at present, there apparently are some moderate, localized pressures in capital goods industries, in a few parts of the country. To the extent that there are any inflationary demand pressures, at all, they come from sharply rising business outlays for new plant and equipment. And if these pressures are to be curbed, then, let us get at the source of the problem and curb this one-sector boom.

Moreover, the alternative suggestion of some people -- to curtail government investments in human resources and needed public services -- would be grossly unfair and, perhaps, socially dangerous. It would be most unfair to compel the poor and the disadvantaged to bear the major burden of the Vietnam conflict and the capital goods boom. In addition, it would be socially dangerous, in my opinion, to undermine or destroy the popular expectations, aroused by the progressive social and economic legislation of the past several years.

Fiscal policy action to curtail the one-sector boom would prod business managements into reviewing and postponing some of their current plans to expand and modernize productive capacity. It could reduce pressures on resources in heavy goods industries, at a time when rising military spending is increasing demand in those same industries. It could bring the rise of capital goods outlays down towards a more sustainable rate and curb the potential of a sharp drop in such outlays a year or two from now. And it could leave ample economic resources for a continuing expansion of government investment in human resources and essential public services -- such as federal programs of aid to education, training of the labor force, the rebuilding of our metropolitan areas and the war on poverty.

The tightened monetary policy of recent months -- with interest rates at their highest levels in a generation or more -- has not curbed the capital goods boom, since most large and middle-sized companies have ample and sometimes huge supplies of their own funds, after four years of skyrocketing profits and internal flows of cash. In addition, such companies can borrow money under the most favorable circumstances and at the prime rate. But the tightened monetary policy has possibly curbed residential construction, which has been a relatively weak area of the economy for several years. It undoubtedly is curtailing state and local government outlays for the expansion of needed public services. And it is clearly increasing the cost of loans to consumers and small business. Further tightening of monetary policy can possibly generate a downward spiral through most parts of the economy -- perhaps bringing an end to the capital goods boom, but only after other sectors of the economy have been pulled down.

The sharply out-of-line capital goods boom, which has been fostered by government subsidies and tax reductions on business income, can and should be curbed by an effective rise of business taxes.

* * *

The one-sector boom of corporate profits and business investment in new plant and equipment should not be confused with a general economic inflationary situation.

There are no general, widespread inflationary shortages of goods, productive capacity and manpower. There is no generally excessive demand for goods in short supply. There is no consumer scare-buying or hoarding. Neither is there evidence of a widespread, sharp build-up of business inventories.

In addition, the increase of social security taxes on employees, effective January 1, 1966, is cutting into consumer income by about $2½ billion this year. And the recent tax measure, adopted by the Congress, will have the effect of withdrawing another $1 billion, or close to it, from consumer buying power in 1966. Fiscal policy restraint of consumer buying power is already in effect, although there is no sharp rise of consumer spending and there are no inflationary shortages of consumer goods.

Moreover, the economy is not yet at full employment or at the ceiling of its vast productive ability. In most industries, and in almost all parts of the country, there are still considerable numbers of unemployed and underemployed people and amounts of productive capacity.

The economy's ability to produce more goods and services, more efficiently, is expanding rapidly. The labor force is expected to grow about 1½ million, or about 2 percent, this year. Productivity which has been rising at a rapid pace in recent years, is expected to increase about 3 percent in 1966. Moreover, it is anticipated that installations of new plants and machines will expand industry's productive capacity by approximately 7 percent or more.

The American economy has the resources for a considerable rise in demand this year without general and widespread inflationary shortages. Moreover, it is important to remember the difference between the economic impacts of the current situation and the Korean conflict, when general inflationary pressures required a wide range of restraints, regulations and controls.

Our economy is now about twice as big as it was in the early 1950s. In 1952 and 1953 national defense expenditures accounted for about 13 percent of total national production. In contrast, defense expenditures accounted for 7½ percent of total output in 1965, and in 1966 they are expected to account for an only slightly greater share. In addition, the Korean War required a sharp rise in the size of the Armed Forces and in military expenditures. The Armed Forces are expected to expand 300,000 in 1966 -- they rose 1½ million between 1950 and 1951. Moreover, in contrast to the scheduled increase of military spending this year, defense expenditures rose $19.5 billion between 1950 and 1951 and another $12.3 billion in the following year.

In light of this analysis of the current economic situation, I view with suspicion the proposals of those who say we are in the midst of a general, widespread inflationary situation that requires slamming on the brakes. Such action could halt or reverse the welcome reduction of unemployment at the very time, when the economy is at long-last beginning to provide job opportunities for the poor, the disadvantaged and the unskilled, long-term unemployed. Moreover, cutbacks of such government programs as the war on poverty, aid to education, manpower retraining and the rebuilding of our metropolitan areas -- as proposed by some people who desire to slam the brakes on the economy -- could undermine or destroy the hopes that these programs have aroused among the poor and most of the population.

* * *

However, we are in the midst of a one-sector boom that is creating distortions and some localized strains in the economy.

From 1963 to 1964, outlays for new plants and machines rose 11.4 percent -- two-thirds faster than the increase of total national production. And from 1964 to 1965, such outlays soared 15.4 percent -- slightly more than twice as fast as the gross national product. This year, expenditures for new plant and equipment are expected to soar again by about 16 percent, or about twice as fast as total output.

This trend is clearly unsustainable. Business outlays for new plants and machines cannot continue to rise twice as fast as total demand for too long. Such out-of-line, one-sector boom results in the addition of large amounts of new productive capacity, at a much faster pace than the demand for goods and services. When idle capacity begins to increase, as in 1957 -- during the one-sector capital goods boom of 1955-57 -- businessmen begin to cut back these outlays as they did rather drastically in 1958.

Moreover, there is some evidence that the American economy cannot long sustain rising economic activities and low levels of unemployment, when outlays for new plant and equipment account for over 10 percent of total national production. At the 1963 meetings of the American Statistical Association, Professor Arthur Okun of Yale University, a present member of the Council of Economic Advisers, concluded a careful examination of this issue with the following observation: "Over the long-run, we may optimistically hope to do better than the implied 9.8 percent as our investment ratio at full employment. But, at this point, such a view is better supported by hope than by conviction."

However, outlays for new plants and machines accounted for 10.3 percent of total national production in 1965 and they were rising rapidly. This year, they are now expected to move up to about 11 percent of the gross national product -- perhaps $7-$8 billion above a sustainable level.

In 1958, business investment dropped sharply, after accounting for 10.5 percent of total national production in the previous year. I think it is utterly clear, by any rational method of examination, that the current one-sector capital goods boom cannot be sustained.

But the difficulty with this out-of-line movement of business investment does not only lie in the future -- it is generating difficulties at present.

With military expenditures now rising, in response to the Vietnam situation, the only sector of the private economy that is increasing very sharply is business outlays for new plants and machines. This one-sector boom is creating some localized strains within heavy goods industries in some parts of the country. And, in combination with rising military expenditures, it is generating boom expectations among some businessmen -- a psychological environment for them to boost prices even in industries whose production is not rising sharply and with little regard to cost.

In 1955-57, a one-sector capital goods boom -- without rising military expenditures -- generated short-term, temporary strains in a few capital goods-producing industries and a price boosting psychology that spread through the economy. And now, in 1966, we seem to be in a somewhat similar situation.

Although unit labor costs in manufacturing industries continued their declining trend from last year -- and industrial unit labor costs appear to be stable thus far in 1966 -- the level of industrial prices has been moving up slowly. The gap between wholesale industrial prices and industrial unit labor costs has not been so great since the early 1950s.

The way to curb this trend in the economy is to curb the out-of-line, one-sector capital goods boom. And the way to do so, in my opinion, is to eliminate the government's subsidy of business investment, and/or to increase taxes on corporate profits.

The capital goods boom has been encouraged and fed by government policy. Since 1962, taxes have been cut and the net reduction will amount to an estimated $21.7 billion in 1966. Of these net reductions, more than half is going to corporations and to the top-income 15 percent of American taxpayers.

The 7 percent tax-credit and the reduction of corporate taxes from 52 percent to 48 percent have boosted after-tax profits. And the rise of sales -- accompanied by rapidly increasing productivity, relatively stable labor costs in the economy as a whole and declining unit labor costs in manufacturing, combined with an upcreep of prices -- have contributed to the profits boom.

From 1960 to 1965, profits rose 50 percent before taxes and 66 percent after taxes -- approximately twice as fast as the 27 percent increase in total wage and salary payments and much faster than the 33 percent rise in personal income. In 1965, alone, profits rose 15 percent before taxes and 20 percent after taxes -- more than twice as fast as the 7 percent increase of total wage and salary payments and the similar rise of after-tax personal income.

Depreciation allowances have also been rising rapidly as a result of the step-up of depreciation under the Treasury Department's change of rules in 1962, as well as the expansion of plant and equipment. The cash-flow to corporations (after tax corporate profits plus depreciation allowances) has been moving up much more sharply than total wage and salary payments and after-tax personal income. From 1960 to 1965, the cash-flow to corporations rose 56 percent and in 1965, alone, it increased 13 percent.

Moreover, the flow of cash to corporations is accounting for an increasing share of the corporate gross product. It accounted for 18.4 percent of the corporate gross product in 1964 and 19.1 percent in 1965 -- compared with 18.2 percent in 1955 and 17.6 percent in 1956 during the capital goods boom of the mid-1950s.

These lopsided flows of income have fed the one-sector boom of business outlays for new plant and equipment that is distorting the economy. This distortion -- which threatens some price pressures, now, and an economic decline, in the future -- should be curbed by rescinding the 7 percent tax-credit and/or increasing corporate tax rates.

If there are inflationary pressures anywhere in the private economy at present, they are to be found in the one-sector boom of profits and capital goods outlays. Any rational effort to curb these pressures would require a curb on this one-sector boom.

Postponement of some current business plans to expand plants and machines would reduce local strains in the economy -- when military spending is rising and a further boost is possible -- and curb the boom psychology that threatens general increases in the price level. Such postponement would bring down business investment towards a more sustainable level. And it would leave room for the expansion of essential government programs.

* * *

To accomplish its task of fostering balanced economic growth to reach and sustain full employment, a flexible fiscal policy is certainly needed. But fiscal policy, at any point in time, must be aimed at the special problems that exist, rather than using a general blunderbuss approach. At present, for example, restraint of the one-sector capital goods boom is required, rather than tough general restraints on both consumer and business income.

Moreover, the discussion of fiscal policy in recent years has over-emphasized the tax side and under-emphasized government investment. The long-run growth of the economy and the strengthening of American society require increasing government investments in human resources and in the expansion and improvement of public services. If such investments were increased on a long-term basis -- with ten or twenty year targets to meet public needs -- the rate of expansion could be speeded up or slowed down, depending upon changes in defense requirements and the availability of manpower and productive capacity.

In any case, when the present rise of military spending levels off or declines, the government should promptly increase its investment in the improvement of public services and in human resources, to sustain the economy's advance. Just as the government should be prepared for the contingency of a further rise of military spending, it should also be prepared to offset the easing of military expenditures.

The federal government should develop, coordinate and maintain a national inventory of needs for housing, community facilities and public services, based on present backlogs and future population growth. Each state and metropolitan area should be encouraged to develop an inventory of needs within its geographical jurisdiction, in addition to the development of a coordinated national inventory, prepared by the federal government.

Such comprehensive inventory of needs should provide the foundation for nationwide programs in each category -- based on federal financial and technical assistance to the state and local governments, including federal grants-in-aid and guaranteed loans, as well as direct federal efforts. Target dates should be established for achieving specified objectives and the pace should be speeded up or slowed down, depending upon the availability of manpower and productive capacity and changes in economic conditions.

Such planned effort in the area of government investment would reduce pressures on federal tax policy while at the same time it would make our federal fiscal policy more equitable and flexible. And it would add strength to the national economy and to the fabric of our society.

Atl. Const.
4/1/66

Job Security Director Fears Federalization

WASHINGTON (AP)—The director of the Georgia Employment Security Agency has opposed a bill which he said would federalize the present state-federal makeup of the employment agency.

Marion Williamson testified before a Senate-House labor subcommittee and said his opposition was based on his opinion that:

"The United States Department of Labor in Washington has just too much brass at the top and too many layers of supervisory fat at the top and is overstaffed with overlapping and even competing divisions."

"Despite pious protests to the contrary," Williamson said Thursday, "federalization is the ultimate goal of those who are pushing this measure."

Williamson said the present federal-state employment security system has worked well. He said there is no reason why the secretary of labor or his manpower administrator should start making all decisions in this field.

Williamson also opposed a provision in the bill which he said would divorce the present job insurance program and the employment service.

H. Fred Garrett of Idaho, speaking for the Interstate Conference of Employment Agencies, supported efforts to obtain a new charter for the employment service, then added:

"But we do not believe that they should become the vehicle for complete domination of the program by the federal government to the exclusion of the states."

Garrett, executive director of Idaho's Department of Employment, also said any new charter must not provide the vehicle "for either directly or indirectly" separating the employment service and job insurance systems.

The Washington Post
Business & Finance
SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1966

Brimmer Sees Growth in Work Force

Extra Effort Held Needed For Negro Employment

By Jean White
Washington Post Staff Writer

Like Alice in Wonderland, Negroes will have to run faster and faster in the next decade just to stand still on unemployment rates.

If, for instance, Negroes in 1975 hold the same proportion of each occupation they held in 1964, the unemployment rate among non-whites might go as high as 17 per cent.

But this pessimistic projection doesn't have to materialize and won't if Negroes continue to get better education and training for jobs in highly skilled occupations.

These are the conclusions of Andrew F. Brimmer, new member of the Federal Reserve Board, who took a look into the future yesterday to project the Negro's place in the American economy a decade from now.

He summed up the outlook this way:

"If the rate of improvement registered in the last decade continues, the Negro in the next ten years will strengthen substantially his relative position in the American economy."

But Brimmer tacked on a warning. The gains, he stressed, are "by no means assured" and will take "far greater effort" from Negroes, the Government, and the private sector if the promises are to be fulfilled.

His remarks came at a symposium on "The Negro in the American Economy" held as part of the dedication of North Carolina Mutual Insurance Co. in Durham, N.C.

Brimmer made these projections for population and labor force trends over the next decade:

- The Negro population will grow by 28 per cent to approximately 27 million by 1975. This will be almost double the overall population rise of 15 per cent, lifting the Negro proportion to 12.2 per cent of the projected 223 million population.
- By 1975, about 10.7 million non-whites will be in the labor force compared with the 8.5 million a year ago. This would be 12 per cent of the work force.
- One potential trouble spot lies in the fact that an increasing proportion of the increasing number of teenagers will be non-white. Now one out of four Negro teenagers is jobless, and this high rate has been blamed for much restlessness and frustration in urban ghettos.
- Negroes got a 6.9 per cent share of the $424 billion in aggregate money income last year. If the present trends continued, it would rise to 8.2 per cent in 1975.

Brimmer emphasized the need for more vocational training and education for Negroes so that greater numbers shift from unskilled, blue-collar jobs into professional and highly skilled jobs. If present trends continue, he said, the occupational picture will be substantially different from what it is today.

He also foresaw increasing opportunities for Negro businessmen in an economy with more small service industries requiring less capital investment.

Ask Secty re speeches
Check BNA when indicated
Ask for "popular" interpretive material

EXECUTIVE ORDER

11246

EQUAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITY

Under and by virtue of the authority vested in me as President of the United States by the Constitution and statutes of the United States, it is ordered as follows:

PART I - Nondiscrimination in Government Employment

SECTION 101. It is the policy of the Government of the United States to provide equal opportunity in Federal employment for all qualified persons, to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin, and to promote the full realization of equal employment opportunity through a positive, continuing program in each executive department and agency. The policy of equal opportunity applies to every aspect of Federal employment policy and practice.

SEC. 102. The head of each executive department and agency shall establish and maintain a positive program of equal employment opportunity for all civilian employees and applicants for employment within his jurisdiction in accordance with the policy set forth in Section 101.

SEC. 103. The Civil Service Commission shall supervise and provide leadership and guidance in the conduct of equal employment opportunity programs for the civilian employees of and applications for employment within the executive departments and agencies and shall review agency program accomplishments periodically. In order to facilitate the achievement of a model program for equal employment opportunity in the Federal service, the Commission may consult from time to time with such individuals, groups, or organizations as may be of assistance in improving the Federal program and realizing the objectives of this Part.

SEC. 104. The Civil Service Commission shall provide for the prompt, fair, and impartial consideration of all complaints of discrimination in Federal employment on the basis of race, creed, color, or national origin. Procedures for the consideration of complaints shall include at least one impartial review within the executive department or agency and shall provide for appeal to the Civil Service Commission.

SEC. 105. The Civil Service Commission shall issue such regulations, orders, and instructions as it deems necessary and appropriate to carry out its responsibilities under this Part, and the head of each executive department and agency shall comply with the regulations, orders, and instructions issued by the Commission under this Part.

PART II - Nondiscrimination in Employment by Government Contractors and Subcontractors

Subpart A - Duties of the Secretary of Labor

SEC. 201. The Secretary of Labor shall be responsible for the administration of Parts II and III of this Order and shall adopt such rules and regulations and issue such orders as he deems necessary and appropriate to achieve the purposes thereof.

Subpart B - Contractors' Agreements

SEC. 202. Except in contracts exempted in accordance with Section 204 of this Order, all Government contracting agencies shall include in every Government contract hereafter entered into the following provisions:

"During the performance of this contract, the contractor agrees as follows:

"(1) The contractor will not discriminate against any employee or applicant for employment because of race, creed, color, or national origin. The contractor will take affirmative action to ensure that applicants are employed, and that employees are treated during employment, without regard to their race, creed, color, or national origin. Such action shall include, but not be limited to the following: employment, upgrading, demotion, or transfer; recruitment or recruitment advertising; layoff or termination; rates of pay or other forms of compensation; and selection for training, including apprenticeship. The contractor agrees to post in conspicuous places, available to employees and applicants for employment, notices to be provided by the contracting officer setting forth the provisions of this nondiscrimination clause.

"(2) The contractor will, in all solicitations or advertisements for employees placed by or on behalf of the contractor, state that all qualified applicants will receive consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color, or national origin.

"(3) The contractor will send to each labor union or representative of workers with which he has a collective bargaining agreement or other contract or understanding, a notice, to be provided by the agency contracting officer, advising the labor union or workers' representative of the contractor's commitments under Section 202 of Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. 24, 1965, and shall post copies of the notice in conspicuous places available to employees and applicants for employment.

"(4) The contractor will comply with all provisions of Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. 24, 1965, and of the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary of Labor.

"(5) The contractor will furnish all information and reports required by Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. , 1965, and by the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor, or pursuant thereto, and will permit access to his books, records, and accounts by the contacting agency and the Secretary of Labor for purposes of investigation to ascertain compliance with such rules, regulations, and orders.

"(6) In the event of the contractor's noncompliance with the nondiscrimination clauses of this contract or with any of such rules, regulations, or orders, this contract may be cancelled, terminated, or suspended in whole or in part and the contractor may be declared ineligible for further Government contracts in accordance with procedures authorized in Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. 24 , 1965, and such other sanctions may be imposed and remedies involved as provided in Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. 24 , 1965, or by rule, regulation, or order of the Secretary of Labor, or as otherwise provided by law.

"(7) The contractor will include the provisions of Paragraphs (1) through (7) in every subcontract or purchase order unless exempted by rules, regulations, or orders of the Secretary of Labor issued pursuant to Section 204 of Executive Order No. 11246 of Sept. 24 , 1965, so that such provisions will be binding upon each subcontractor or vendor. The contractor will take such action with respect to any subcontract or purchase order as the contracting agency may direct as a means of enforcing such provisions including sanctions for noncompliance: Provided, however, That in the event the contractor becomes involved in, or is threatened with, litigation with a subcontractor or vendor as a result of such direction by the contracting agency, the contractor may request the United States to enter into such litigation to protect the interests of the United States.

who has been exempted

SEC. 203. (a) Each contractor having a contract containing the provisions prescribed in Section 202 shall file, and shall cause each of his subcontractors to file, Compliance Reports with the contracting agency or the Secretary of Labor as may be directed. Compliance Reports shall be filed within such times and shall contain such information as to the practices, policies, programs, and employment policies, programs, and employment statistics of the contractor and each subcontractor, and shall be in such form, as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe.

(b) Bidders or prospective contractors or subcontractors may be required to state whether they have participated in any previous contract subject to the provisions of this Order, or any preceding similar Executive order, and in that event to submit, on behalf of themselves and their proposed subcontractors, Compliance Reports prior to or as an initial part of their bid or negotiation of a contract.

(c) Whenever the contractor or subcontractor has a collective bargaining agreement or other contract or understanding with a labor union or an agency referring workers or providing or supervising apprenticeship or training for such workers, the Compliance Report shall include such information as to such labor union's or agency's practices and policies affecting compliance as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe: Provided, That to the extent such information is within the exclusive possession of a labor union or an agency referring workers of providing or supervising apprenticeship or training and such labor union or agency shall refuse to furnish such information to the contractor, the contractor shall so certify to the contracting agency as part of its Compliance Report and shall set forth what efforts he has made to obtain such information.

(d) The contracting agency or the Secretary of Labor may direct that any bidder or prospective contractor or subcontractor shall submit, as part of his Compliance Report, a statement in writing, signed by an authorized officer or agent on behalf of any labor union or any agency referring workers or providing or supervising apprenticeship or other training, with which the bidder or prospective contractor deals, with supporting information, to the effect that the signer's practices and policies do not discriminate on the grounds of race, color, creed, or national origin, and that the signer either will affirmatively cooperate in the implementation of thepolicy and provisions of this Order or that it consents and agrees that recruitment, employment, and the terms and conditions of employment under the proposed contract shall be in accordance with the purposes and provisions of the Order. In the event that the union, or the agency shall refuse to execute such a statement, the Compliance Report shall so certify and set forth what efforts have been made to secure such a statement and such additional factual material as the contracting agency or the Secretary of Labor may require.

Check against BNA

Exemptions Special

exemptions by rule

SEC. 204. The Secretary of Labor may, when he deems that special circumstances in the national interest so require, exempt a contracting agency from the requirement of including any or all of the provisions of Section 202 of this Order in any specific contract, subcontract, or purchase order. The Secretary of Labor may, by rule or regulation, also exempt certain classes of contracts, subcontracts, or purchase orders (1) whenever work is to be or has been performed outside the United States and no recruitment of workers within the limits of the United States is involved; (2) for standard commercial supplies or raw materials; (3) involving less than specified amounts of money or specified numbers of workers; or (4) to the extent that they involve subcontracts below a specified tier. ? The Secretary of Labor may also provide, by rule, regulation, or order, for the exemption of facilities of a contractor which are in all respects separate and distinct from activities of the contractor related to the performance of the contract: Provided, That such an exemption will not interfere with or impede the effectuation of the purposes of this Order: And provided further, That in the absence of such an exemption all facilities shall be covered by the provisions of this Order.

Subpart C - Powers and Duties of the Secretary of Labor and the Contracting Agencies

SEC. 205. Each contracting agency shall be primarily responsible for obtaining compliance with the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor with respect to contracts entered into by such agency or its contractors. All contracting agencies shall comply with the rules of the Secretary of Labor in discharging their primary responsibility for securing compliance with the provisions of contracts and otherwise with the terms of this Order and of the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor issued pursuant to this Order. They are directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor and to furnish the Secretary of Labor such information and assistance as he may require in the performance of his functions under this Order. They are further directed to appoint or designate, from among the agency's personnel, compliance officers. It shall be the duty of such officers to seek compliance with the objectives of this Order by conference, conciliation, mediation, or persuasion.

SEC. 206. (a) The Secretary of Labor may investigate the employment practices of any Government contractor or subcontractor, or initiate such investigation by the appropriate contracting agency, to determine whether or not the contractual provisions specified in Section 202 of this Order have been violated. Such investigation shall be conducted in accordance with the procedures established by the Secretary of Labor and the investigating agency shall report to the Secretary of Labor any action taken or recommended.

(b) The Secretary of Labor may receive and investigate or cause to be investigated complaints by employees or prospective employees of a Government contractor or subcontractor which allege discrimination contrary to the contractual provisions specified in Section 202 of this Order. If this investigation is conducted for the Secretary of Labor by a contracting agency, that agency shall report to the Secretary what action has been taken or is recommended with regard to such complaints.

SEC. 207. The Secretary of Labor shall use his best efforts, directly and through contracting agencies, other interested Federal, State, and local agencies, contractors, and all other available instrumentalities to cause any labor union engaged in work under Government contracts or any agency referring workers or providing or supervising apprenticeship or training for or in the course of such work to cooperate in the implementation of the purposes of this Order. The Secretary of Labor shall, in appropriate cases, notify the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Department of Justice, or other appropriate Federal agencies whenever it has reason to believe that the practices of any such labor organization or agency violate Title VI or Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 or other provision of Federal law.

SEC. 208. (a) The Secretary of Labor, or any agency, officer, or employee in the executive branch of the Government designated by rule, regulation, or order of the Secretary, may hold such hearings, public or private, as the Secretary may deem advisable for compliance, enforcement, or educational purposes.

(b) The Secretary of Labor may hold, or cause to be held, hearings in accordance with Subsection (a) of this Section prior to imposing, ordering, or recommending the imposition of penalties and sanctions under this Order. No order for debarment of any contractor from further Government contracts under Section 209(a)(6) shall be made without affording the contractor an opportunity for a hearing.

Subpart D - Sanctions and Penalties

SEC. 209. (a) In accordance with such rules, regulations, or orders as the Secretary of Labor may issue or adopt, the Secretary or the appropriate contracting agency may;

check BNA

(1) Publish, or cause to be published, the names of contractors or unions which it has concluded have compiled or have failed to comply with the provisions of this Order or of the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary of Labor.

(2) Recommend to the Department of Justice that, in cases in which there is substantial or material violation or the threat of substantial or material violation of the contractual provisions set forth in Section 202 of this Order, appropriate proceedings be brought to enforce these provisions, including the enjoining, within the limitations of applicable law, of organizations, individuals, or groups who prevent directly or indirectly, or seek to prevent directly or indirectly, compliance with the provisions of this Order.

(3) Recommend to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission or the Department of Justice that appropriate proceedings be instituted under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

(4) Recommend to the Department of Justice that criminal proceedings be brought for the furnishing of false information to any contracting agency or to the Secretary of Labor as the case may be.

(5) Cancel, terminate, suspend, or cause to be cancelled, terminated, or suspended, any contract, or any portion or portions thereof, for failure of the contractor or subcontractor to comply with the nondiscrimination provisions of the contract. Contracts may be cancelled, terminated, or suspended absolutely or continuance of contracts may be conditioned upon a program for future compliance approved by the contracting agency.

(6) Provide that any contracting agency shall refrain from entering into further contracts, or extensions or other modifications of existing contracts, with any noncomplying contractor, until such contractor has satisfied the Secretary of Labor that such contractor has established and will carry out personnel and employment policies in compliance with the provisions of this Order.

(b) Under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, each contracting agency shall make reasonable efforts within a reasonable time limitation to secure compliance with the contract provisions of this Order by methods of conference, conciliation, mediation, and persuasion before proceedings shall be instituted under Subsection (a) (2) of this Section, or before a contract shall be cancelled or terminated in whole or in part under Subsection (a) (5) of this Section for failure of a contractor or subcontractor to comply with the contract provisions of this Order.

SEC. 210. Any contracting agency taking any action authorized by this Subpart, whether on its own motion, or as directed by the Secretary of Labor, or under the rules and regulations of the Secretary, shall promptly notify the Secretary of such action. Whenever the Secretary of Labor makes a determination under this Section, he shall promptly notify the appropriate contracting agency of the action recommended. The agency shall take such action and shall report the results thereof to the Secretary of Labor within such time as the Secretary shall specify.

SEC. 211. If the Secretary shall so direct, contracting agencies shall not enter into contracts with any bidder or prospective contractor unless the bidder or prospective contractor has satisfactorily complied with the provisions of this Order or submits a program for compliance acceptable to the Secretary of Labor or, if the Secretary so authorizes, to the contracting agency.

SEC. 212. Whenever a contracting agency cancels or terminates a contract, or whenever a contractor has been debarred from further Government contracts, under Section 209 (a) (6) because of noncompliance with the contract provisions with regard to nondiscrimination, the Secretary of Labor, or the contracting agency involved, shall promptly notify the Comptroller General of the United States. Any such debarment may be rescinded by the Secretary of Labor or by the contracting agency which imposed the sanction.

Subpart E -- Certificates of Merit

SEC. 213. The Secretary of Labor may provide for issuance of a United States Government Certificate of Merit to employers or labor unions, or other agencies which are or may hereafter be engaged in work under Government contracts, if the Secretary is satisfied that the personnel and employment practices of the employer, or that the personnel, training, apprenticeship, membership, grievance and representation, upgrading, and other practices and policies of the labor union or other agency conform to the purposes and provisions of this Order.

Secty 15 Sued any?

SEC. 214. Any Certificate of Merit may at any time be suspended or revoked by the Secretary of Labor if the holder thereof, in the judgment of the Secretary, has failed to comply with the provisions of this Order.

SEC. 215. The Secretary of Labor may provide for the exemption of any employer, labor union, or other agency from any reporting requirements imposed under or pursuant to this Order if such employer, labor union, or other agency has been awarded a Certificate of Merit which has not been suspended or revoked.

PART III - Nondiscrimination Provisions in Federally Assisted Construction Contracts

SEC. 301. Each executive department and agency which administers a program involving Federal financial assistance shall require as a condition for the approval of any grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee thereunder, which may involve a construction contract, that the applicant for Federal assistance undertake and agree to incorporate, or cause to be incorporated, into all construction contracts paid for in whole or in part with funds obtained from the Federal Government or borrowed on the credit of the Federal Government pursuant to such grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee, or undertaken pursuant to any Federal program involving such grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee, the provisions prescribed for Government contracts by Section 203 of this Order or such modification thereof, preserving in substance the contractor's obligations thereunder, as may be approved by the Secretary of Labor, together with such additional provisions as the Secretary deems appropriate to establish and protect the interest of the United States in the enforcement of those obligations. Each such applicant shall also undertake and agree (1) to assist and cooperate actively with the administering department or agency and the Secretary of Labor in obtaining the compliance of contractors and subcontractors with those contract provisions and with the rules, regulations, and relevant orders of the Secretary, (2) to obtain and to furnish to the administering department or agency and to the Secretary of Labor such information as they may require for the supervision of such compliance, (3) to carry out sanctions and penalties for violation of such obligations imposed upon contractors and subcontractors by the Secretary of Labor or the administering department or agency pursuant to Part II, Subpart D, of this Order, and (4) to refrain from entering into any contract subject to this Order, or extension or other modification of such a contract with a contractor debarred from Government contracts under Part II, Subpart D, of this Order.

BNA Sec'ty's modification ?

Def.

SEC. 302. (a) "Construction contract" as used in this Order means any contract for the construction, rehabilitation, alteration, conversion, extension, or repair of buildings, highways, or other improvements to real property.

(b) The provisions of Part II of this Order shall apply to such construction contracts, and for purposes of such application the administering department or agency shall be considered the contracting agency referred to therein.

(c) The term "applicant" as used in this Order means an applicant for Federal assistance or, as determined by agency regulation, other program participant, with respect to whom an application for any grant, contract, loan, insurance, or guarantee is not finally acted upon prior to the effective date of this Part, and it includes such an applicant after he becomes a recipient of such Federal assistance.

SEC. 303. (a) Each administering department and agency shall be responsible for obtaining the compliance of such applicants with their undertakings under this Order. Each administering department and agency is directed to cooperate with the Secretary of Labor, and to furnish the Secretary such information and assistance as he may require in the performance of his functions under this Order.

(b) In the event an applicant fails and refuses to comply with his undertakings, the administering department or agency may take any or all of the following actions: (1) cancel, terminate, or suspend in whole or in part the agreement, contract, or other arrangement with such applicant with respect to which the failure and refusal occurred; (2) refrain from extending any further assistance to the applicant under the program with respect to which the failure or refusal occurred until satisfactory assurance of future compliance has been received from such applicant; and (3) refer the case to the Department of Justice for appropriate legal proceedings.

(c) Any action with respect to an applicant pursuant to Subsection (b) shall be taken in conformity with Section 602 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (and the regulations of the administering department or agency issued thereunder), to the extent applicable. In no case shall action be taken with respect to an applicant pursuant to Clause (1) or (2) of Subsection (b) without notice and opportunity for hearing before the administering department or agency.

SEC. 304. Any executive department or agency which imposes by rule, regulation, or order requirements of non-discrimination in employment, other than requirements imposed pursuant to this Order, may delegate to the Secretary of Labor by agreement such responsibilities with respect to compliance standards, reports, and procedures as would tend to bring the administration of such requirements into conformity with the administration of requirements imposed under this Order: Provided, That actions to effect compliance by recipients of Federal financial assistance with requirements imposed pursuant to Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 shall be taken in conformity with the procedures and limitations prescribed in Section 602 thereof and the regulations of the administering department or agency issued thereunder.

PART IV - Miscellaneous

SEC. 401. The Secretary of Labor may delegate to any officer, agency, or employee in the Executive branch of the Government, any function or duty of the Secretary under Parts II and III of this Order, except authority to promulgate rules and regulations of a general nature.

SEC. 402. The Secretary of Labor shall provide administrative support for the execution of the program known as the "Plans for Progress."

SEC. 403. (a) Executive Orders Nos. 10590 (January 18, 1955), 10722 (August 5, 1957), 10925 (March 6, 1961), 11114 (June 22, 1963), and 11162 (July 28, 1964), are hereby superseded and the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity established by Executive Order No. 10925 is hereby abolished. All records and property in the custody of the Committee shall be transferred to the Civil Service Commission and the Secretary of Labor, as appropriate.

(b) Nothing in this Order shall be deemed to relieve any person of any obligation assumed or imposed under or pursuant to any Executive Order superseded by this Order. All rules, regulations, orders, instructions, designations, and other directives issued by the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity and those issued by the heads of various departments or agencies under or pursuant to any of the Executive orders superseded by this Order, shall, to the extent that they are not inconsistent with this Order, remain in full force and effect unless and until revoked or superseded by appropriate authority. References in such directives to provisions of the superseded orders shall be deemed to be references to the comparable provisions of this Order.

SEC. 404. The General Services Administration shall take appropriate action to revise the standard Government contract forms to accord with the provisions of this Order and of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 405. This Order shall become effective 30 days after the date of this Order.

LYNDON B. JOHNSON

THE WHITE HOUSE,

September 24, 1965.

# #

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

March 23, 1966

TO: Members of the Task Force on Employment, Training, and Welfare

Dr. Vivian Henderson asked me to forward this rough list of action possibilities in advance of the Task Force meeting of March 25, to stimulate your consideration of possible Task Force recommendations. The list was hastily compiled by the staff and is for preliminary discussion purposes only.

Sincerely,

Albert L. Shostack

ALBERT L. SHOSTACK
Staff Assistant

Enclosure

Possible Approach for Staff Work

The following approach to staff work for the White House Conference may be useful:

Step 1: The task force on employment and welfare can develop a list of recommendations for consideration by the entire conference. This list would be based on the recommendations of the November planning conference plus new developments since that date.

Step 2: For as many of these recommendations as possible, the task force staff would collect background information including relevant statistics, the current status and previous history of proposed programs, the comments and recommendations of interested agencies, indications of the problems and expected impact, etc. (In this connection, it would be useful to have each interested Federal agency designate a high-level liaison staff member through whom the task force staff can obtain necessary information and comments.)

Step 3: The task force staff would prepare brief one-page summary sheets for each recommendation. These summary sheets, written in a clear and simple manner, would be bound and presented to the full Conference for its consideration. Each summary sheet might have headings such as the following:

A. The proposed recommendation

B. Action necessary to implement the recommendation (For example, specified legislative action, appropriate administrative action, necessary agreements with labor unions and employers, etc.)

C. Need for the proposed services

D. Evaluation of services currently available

E. Expected impact, coverage, and costs

F. Pros and cons of the recommendation, including anticipated problems, identification of alternative approaches, and views of interested agencies

For discussion purposes only.

PRELIMINARY LIST OF ACTION POSSIBILITIES

For Consideration by the Task Force on Employment, Training, and Welfare

March 23, 1966

NOTE: Items marked (c) were tentatively suggested by the November Planning Conference.

Recommendation	Action Needed
A. Attack Discrimination in Employment
1. Improve administration of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act by: (c) a. More adequate budget and personnel; b. Shift of orientation from individual complaints to attacking patterns of racial discrimination; c. Strengthening of sanctions; and d. Authorizing cease and desist orders and other affirmative action by the Commission	Legislative
2. Attack discrimination in State and local employment. (c)	Administrative
3. Establish performance criteria to strengthen compliance under Executive Order 11246 (Nondiscrimination on government contracts) (c)	Administrative
4. Intensify efforts to insure the employment of Negroes at higher skill and professional levels in privately operated organizations subsidized by Federal funds: e.g., Negro physicians in hospitals. (c)	Administrative
5. Amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act to prohibit discrimination by employers and unions regardless of their number of employees or members.	Legislative
B. Create New Job Opportunities for Minority Groups
1. Improve local transportation facilities to give minority groups easier access to jobs. (c)	Local and National Administrative and Legislative
2. Encourage Negro-owned business enterprises by increasing the availability of Federal loans, grants, and technical assistance. (c)	Legislative and Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
3. Establish a Federally financed work program to provide jobs for and to improve the employability of hard-core unemployed workers.	Legislative
4. Experiment with semi-public corporations providing useful last-resort employment to unskilled workers who are not capable of meeting regular job requirements or of profiting from occupational training. For example, the workers might assist in conservation or beautification programs such as removal or screening of automobile junkyards.	Legislative
5. Institute a program of Federal wage supplements as incentives to employers to hire marginal or relatively unproductive workers.	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
C. Improve Federally Subsidized Programs for Equipping Unemployed and Underemployed Workers with Work Skills
1. Conduct special programs to help graduates of smaller Negro colleges to qualify for job opportunities available in the health or other growing technical fields. (c)	Legislative and Administrative
2. Provide tax credits to stimulate in-plant education and training. (c)	Legislative
3. Use Federal Government contracting authority to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with work on government contracts. (c)	Administrative
4. Increase the effectiveness of the MDTA program, including:
a. Positive efforts to include more Negro trainees; (c)	Administrative
b. Additional stress on on-the-job training; (c)	Administrative
c. Reducing paper work and time lags;	Administrative
d. Maintaining closer contact with employers regarding job requirements and encouraging direct contact between prospective employers and trainees throughout the instruction process;	Administrative
e. Expanding MDTA training in fields other than specific occupations to enhance the employability or trainability of disadvantaged workers; e.g., training in communication skills, work habits, attitudes, personal appearance and hygiene, etc.	Legislative and Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
f. Expanding training to upgrade employed workers by defraying the unusual costs incurred by employers in the course of preparing disadvantaged workers for better jobs;	Administrative and Legislative
g. Permitting additional training for a worker who has completed a previous course within the year but has not been able to find a job;	Legislative
5. Build-in greater flexibility in the provision of MDTA training allowances, including:
a. Increase allowances to the level of public assistance payments where needed to induce public assistance recipients to accept occupational training;	Legislative
b. Reduce the requirement of two years of work experience to one year, thus allowing more youths and adult women to qualify for allowances;	Legislative
c. Pay partial allowances for part-time training;	Legislative
d. Raising training allowances in training courses of long duration.	Legislative
6. Encourage the use of MDTA training for Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates by removing the one-year restriction on the payment of MDTA training allowances to former recipients of other federal allowances, and by suspending the unemployment, work experience, and household status requirements for former NYC enrollees. Exempt NYC youth from the 25 percent limitation on young trainees in the MDTA.	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
7. Amend the MDTA to institute a Federally financed program of vocational guidance and occupational training for inmates of Federal, State, and local penal institutions who require assistance in preparing for productive work at the completion of their prison terms. This program should not be subject to apportionment or state matching requirements.	Legislative
8. Expand the program of experimental and demonstration projects under MDTA to develop and test new ways of meeting the employment and training needs of disadvantaged workers.	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
D. Programs to Meet the Special Needs of Negro Youths
1. Sharply expand employment-oriented services for in-school youths, including efforts to motivate youths toward jobs in which opportunities are increasing, reduction of drop-outs, and vocational counseling by skilled counselors who are acquainted with emerging job opportunities and the requirements of industry.	Legislative and Administrative
2. Experiment with Job Corps Programs in urban settings, realistically geared to the employment and social environment that participants are likely to face upon graduation from the Job Corps.	Administrative
3. Expand the Neighborhood Youth Corps Program, including:
(a) Providing additional resources;	Legislative
(b) Reducing the minimum eligibility age from 16 to 14;	Legislative
(c) Admitting young people between the ages of 22 and 24 to the out-of-school work experience program in order to improve the employability of those with severe unemployment problems.	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
E. Fill the Gaps in a Comprehensive Program of Income Security
1. Enact negative income tax or guaranteed minimum income law. (c)	Legislative
2. Provide family allowances. (c)	Legislative
3. Extend coverage and raise benefits under unemployment insurance. (c)	Legislative
4. Establish a federally financed work program to provide last-resort employment to workers who can neither find nor be trained for other jobs.	Legislative
5. Require that Aid to Families with Dependent Children be granted to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is unemployed through no fault of his own and is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
F. Efforts by Non-Government Organizations to Improve the Employment Status of Negroes
1. Positive efforts by employers to locate new business establishments in areas accessible to Negro workers. (c)	Private Employers and possible Legislative incentives
2. Positive efforts by private employers to provide job opportunities for Negro workers.
a. Modification of job duties to permit the employment of low-skilled workers. (c)	Private Employers
b. Review of job requirements to eliminate unrealistic educational and test specifications.	Private Employers
c. Positive recruitment of minority groups in cooperation with Government agencies and minority group organizations.	Employers, Government Agencies, and Minority Group Organizations
3. Elimination of discrimination in apprenticeship programs and development of pre-apprenticeship training programs to prepare nonwhites for apprenticeship. (c)	Private Employers and Labor Organizations
4. Systematic efforts by employers to review the work potential of nonwhites on their present staffs to insure full use of this potential and to encourage upgrading.	Employers
5. Emphasis on insuring equal employment opportunity in non-profit activities, including the promotion of nondiscriminatory policies in local and State affiliates of national medical, hospital, and other non-profit associations. (c)	Private Non-Profit Organizations

Recommendation	Action Needed
6. Establishment of local and State equal employment opportunity councils. (c)	Administrative, Business, Non-Profit Organizations, Labor Unions, Etc.
7. Assistance from non-Government sources for Negroes who are starting or operating business enterprises, including the extension of franchises to nonwhites and the encouragement of joint ventures by white and nonwhite businessmen. (c)	Businessmen

Recommendation	Action Needed
G. Strengthen Recruitment and Job Development Programs for Minority Groups, Including the Federal-State Employment Service System
1. Strengthen the Federal-State employment service system by stronger national standards, better staffing, prevention of discrimination, intensified work with minority groups in rural areas, insuring that State personnel are covered by merit systems, and providing additional funds to improve services for minority group members. (c)	Legislative and Administrative, including inplementation of recent Task Force report.
2. Undertake Human Resources Development Programs in major urban areas, taking an individualized approach to the needs of disadvantaged workers. This should include experimental centers in several cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance. This might include diagnosis of needs, individual counseling, referral to health, welfare, or other services, referral to training, and specialized job development and placement under continuing supervision. These centers would be somewhat similar to Youth Opportunity Centers but they would deal with adults.	Administrative and Legislative
3. Conduct a comprehensive Government information and technical assistance program to encourage employers and unions to provide equal employment opportunities, to exchange information on the experience of employers who have recently reversed discriminatory policies, and to provide realistic guidance to employers and unions facing severe problems in complying with nondiscrimination policies.	Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
H. Improve Public Assistance and Welfare Services
1. Expand non-cash welfare services to solve the basic causes of poverty among needy people:
(a) Establish a network of service centers in all areas of need to provide a range of services including consumer education; legal assistance; vocational and personal counseling; training in hygiene, home economics, and citizenship; and related activities. (c)	Legislative
(b) Extend free family planning services and materials on a voluntary basis to both married and unmarried public assistance recipients. (c)	Legislative and Administrative
(c) Separate the administration of welfare services from the more mechanical extension of cash assistance. (c)	Administrative
(d) Expand rehabilitative services such as: facilities for day care of children, occupational training and basic education for welfare recipients, counseling, highly selective and supervised job placement of marginal workers, and work experience programs. (c)	Legislative and Administrative
2. Solve the staffing crisis in public assistance agencies:
(a) Employ non-professional "expediters" to inform poor people about available programs and to help them utilize services. (c)	Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
(b) Develop case work and related activities which can be conducted by supplemental subprofessional personnel and develop large scale programs to recruit and train such aides in order to reduce the burden of the professional staff.	Legislative and Administrative
(c) Provide resources for a substantial expansion in the number of case workers and for a reduction of clients per case worker.	Legislative
(d) Improve and expand programs to recruit and train professional case workers.	Legislative
(e) Provide higher salaries for case workers, to make them comparable with other skilled and arduous professions.	Legislative and Administrative
3. Reduce or eliminate residence requirements for public assistance or reimburse the States for payments to nonresidents. (c)	Legislative
4. Adjust public assistance programs to encourage recipients to take seasonal farm jobs without endangering their subsequent access to cash benefits and non-monetary services required to help them make long-range adjustments.	Administrative and State Legislative
5. Establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the States.	Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
I. Programs for Rural Negroes
1. Provide Federally financed employment opportunities to help seasonally employed rural Negroes in the South to supplement low farm incomes. (c)	Legislative
2. Develop a program to facilitate the economic and social assimilation of rural Negroes migrating to the city. (c)	Legislative
a. Centers in rural labor surplus areas to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for jobs and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling;
b. Reception centers in urban labor demand areas equipped to help the in-migrants solve employment and housing problems and to make available to them the range of health, welfare, and other urban services;
c. Residential centers in urban areas--Halfway Houses and Youth Hostels--to provide temporary quarters and health, welfare, and recreation services for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period;
d. Provision of relocation allowances to help migrants meet moving and subsistence costs without imposing burdens on their target community.
3. Expand the labor mobility demonstration program under MDTA and make it a permanent part of the law.	Legislative
4. Experiment with measures to structure the job market for migratory and other seasonal farm workers so as to provide year-round employment and build a skilled and stable farm work force.	Legislative, Administrative, and action by Farm Employers

Recommendation	Action Needed
5. Improve agricultural labor standards, including:	Legislative
a. Extension of Workmen's Compensation,
b. Extension of unemployment insurance,
c. Prohibition of child labor outside of school hours.
6. Sharply expand the availability of vocational counseling and training in rural areas, geared realistically to the demands of the increasingly technical nonagricultural occupations in which the great majority of rural youth must seek employment, and to potential movement to urban areas.	Legislative and Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
J. Improve Labor Standards
1. Expand coverage of Fair Labor Standards Act to industries and occupations currently excluded. (c)	Legislative
2. Raise the minimum wage under FLSA. (c)	Legislative
3. Extend the protection of the Labor Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries. (c)	Legislative

Recommendation	Action Needed
K. Insure Minority Group Representation in Decision-Making and Staffing of Government Agencies
1. "Integrate" the staffs of national agencies concerned with employment and welfare. (c)	Administrative
2. Insure minority group representation on State and local advisory, planning, and action committees under the MDTA, the Public Works and Economic Development Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, and related programs.	Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
L. Research and Analyses
1. Conduct a study of the advantages and disadvantages of converting the Federal-State Public Assistance Program to a Federally operated program which would include: (c) (a) Planning at the national level; (b) A Federalized welfare system with States and local agencies providing only emergency or temporary personal assistance; (c) Abolition of the present public assistance categories and the substitution of a single category based on need; (d) A Federal scale of welfare benefit levels; (e) Federal standards of eligibility.	Administrative
2. Conduct an intensive study of the use of nonprofessionals in the welfare program, including ways in which nonprofessionals can assist professional case workers, the training of nonprofessional aides (including use of Negro colleges and the Job Corps), and examination of ways to gain acceptance of subprofessionals by professional case workers. (c)	Administrative
3. Conduct an intensive study of a panel of migrants from rural to urban areas, tracing their experience, problems, motivations, and adjustments over a substantial time period.	Administrative

Recommendation	Action Needed
4. Encourage identification by race in relevant records of employers, labor unions, the Employment Service, and other agencies in order to provide a basis for evaluating the employment and training status of nonwhites.	Administrative

Add the following item to the March 23 preliminary list of action possibilities:

Recommendation	Action Needed
Preparation of a Comprehensive, Structured Program to Meet Overall Needs for Manpower Services
Develop a comprehensive, structured program to survey and meet the employment, training, and related manpower needs of minority groups. This program should include:	Legislative and Administrative

1. Preparation of a "Human Resources Budget" to systematically:
   a.
   a. Estimate the number, characteristics, and manpower problems of the specific groups in the nonwhite population who require assistance in meeting their job and training needs. This assessment should not only be national in scope but should focus on the 70-odd cities and five or six Southern States in which Negroes are concentrated. Both urban and rural areas of Negro concentration should be included. Data on unemployment, underemployment, and skill attainment should be collected in predominantly Negro neighborhoods on a block-by-block basis if necessary. The assessment should include estimates of future needs based on population, labor force and socio-economic projections.

   b. Identification of the types of manpower services needed by the specific population groups involved; e.g., by in-school youths, out-of-school jobless youths, workers of low skill and educational attainment, older workers, female workers, etc.

   c. Establishment of specific program goals and a time schedule for meeting the goals. These goals should include the number and types of services to be provided, the specific number and types of minority group people to be served, specific locations, and a definite time schedule.

   d. Appraisal of existing Government and non-Government programs to determine the extent to which they can help meet the established goals, and to assign definite priorities and targets to specific agencies.

Recommendation	Action Needed
e. Identification of the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals. This would include determination of the nature, size, timing, and location of the additional programs.
2. Coordinated efforts to develop, propose, and support specific programs and increased resources for which the Human Resources Budget has indicated a need.	Administrative and Legislative
3. A systematic program to evaluate the progress of minority groups in the job market, by area, industry, occupation, and type of worker; and to assess the effectiveness of the Government services involved.	Administrative and Legislative

Add the following item to the March 23 preliminary list of action possibilities:

Recommendation	Action Needed
Coordination of Programs
Improve the coordination of existing programs concerned with human resource development and utilization; e.g., the OEO program, the MDTA program, programs of DHEW and the Department of Commerce. (The President's Committee on Manpower has established teams to coordinate services in 30 selected cities. It has been given responsibility for coordination of key OEO, Department of Labor, and Department of Health, Education and Welfare programs by Executive Order.)	Administrative

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

March 25, 1966

TASK FORCE MEETING ON EMPLOYMENT, TRAINING, AND WELFARE 1901 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Room 301 10:00 a.m.

Present:

Task Force Members

Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman
Mr. Frank Armstrong
Mr. Woodrow Ginsburg
Dr. Emory Via
Dr. T.T. Williams

White House Conference Staff

Mr. Edward Sylvester, Vice Chairman
Reverend Walter Fauntroy, Vice Chairman
Mr. Norman J. McKenzie, Administrative Officer
Mr. Craig W. Christenson, Executive Assistant to the Chairman

Staff Assistants

Mrs. Ellen J. Perkins, Department of Health, Education and Welfare
Dr. Helen Nicol, Department of Health, Education and Welfare
Mr. William Mirengoff, Department of Labor
Mr. Albert Shostack, Department of Labor
Mrs. Dorothy Newman, Department of Labor

The meeting was convened at 10:00 a.m.

The Chairman welcomed members, consultants and staff to the first meeting of the Task Force. He expressed his appreciation at the members coming on such short notice.

The Chairman asked participants to introduce themselves. He added he hoped the following persons would be attending the next meeting of the Task Force:

Eli Ginzberg, Professor of Economics, Columbia University;

Mahlon Puryear, Deputy Director of the National Urban League of New York, who is very interested in working with this group;

Hyland Lewis, Professor of Sociology, Howard University;

Elmer Moore, an Economist, Research, Plans, Programs and Evaluation, Office of Economic Opportunity; Ramon Scruggs, Public Relations Manager, American Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Bell Telephone Company of New York.

Chairman Henderson:

We feel if we can maintain a nucleus to devise continued day-by-day consultations, to write papers, to come up with the kind of content that will make a good presentation to the Council.

Henderson:

As we will operate...We have persons who are not employed in the Government to form the nucleus of the Task Force. The Government will form the nucleus of the Staff. Mr. William Mirengoff, Deputy Director, Office of Manpower, Policy, Evaluation and Research, of the Department of Labor is the head of staff arrangements. Mr. Albert Shostack also of the Office of Manpower will do much of the research. Dorothy Newman, also of the Labor Department, is going to be working with us. There will be others that we will be calling on. We will somewhat move in terms of definitive statement of instructions. We are expecting a sort of staff with some persons outside of Government involved in staff operations.

We don't want Government people to do this work, or a Government point of view. We want to have Government people there but not let them take over. This will give us a good cross reference of ideas. You are aware that this is oriented toward June 1 and 2 when we are having the White House Conference. Our purpose immediately is to prepare for a very important meeting one week away. I understand that Mr. Heineman has scheduled an April 1 meeting, at which time they would like for us to be prepared to share with the Council our ideas about which way things ought to be going in the field of economic security and welfare.

Henderson:

We are expected to share with the Council some notion as definitive as we can be at that point, where we would like to go with this particular subject. At this point it would be wise if we could have Mr. Edward Sylvester, Vice Chairman of the Conference, give us some documentation for the organization of the Conference and give the people here the picture, give us some picture about the general structure of the Task Force.

McKenzie:

We have the staff people here take care of administrative problems, time, attendance, pay, travel, etc. We have made up sets (of papers) for each of you consultants to fill out and on the back put down the travel information for today. Attached are papers from the Planning Session which will be of interest to you.

Colonel Norman McKenzie explained the administrative operations of the Staff and the papers necessary for consultant to receive reimbursement, etc. for time, attendance, travel.

Henderson:

Mr. Sylvester, who is Chief of Staff of Operations, as well as Vice Chairman of the Conference, would you give us a sort of format and how we fit into this scheme of things.

Sylvester:

Sylvester:

To give you some background on this Conference - about three weeks ago the President appointed a 29-man Council to filter through the work of the Planning Session and other ideas for presentation for discussions at the Conference in June. The Chairman, Ben Heineman, Chairman, Chicago and Northwestern Railway, and our Council have agreed that what this meant for them was to see what kinds of specific problems they could present to the Conference for discussion. The Conference should be a "how-to-do-it" Conference and how to attack the problems; "a pie in the sky" conference... the whole orientation is "how-to-do-it." We have two or three items of importance: One, the matter of Economic Security. They did not add Welfare at that time, it was included further down the line. They also decided the matter of Education and Housing were matters of primary concern. They wanted staff work on the Administration of Justice that the President might recommend, that had been introduced to Congress. They want to look further into the matter. There is some question about Health and Welfare, could it be included as part of Economic Security?
Secondly, They want staff proposals on Health, depending on the strength of the proposals whether it would be for presentation at the June Conference. in areas of Economic Security, Education and Housing is going on. This Task Force will deal with Economic Security. We will have a meeting which takes place on April 1 and 2 at which we will present the problems you come up with. I want to emphasize the focus on "how-to-do-it" problems, the point of the problems and results of the Planning Session, its ideas of implementation and additional ideas the Task Force has about it. Our Council will discuss these with the Task Force and decide which are most important and the Task Force is asked to develop them further for the agenda. We have not decided how we will feed these back into the Council and the results of this first meeting.

Sylvester:

One other point, the President in his initial mandate wanted to make it clear that this is a non-government Conference, but is placing the resources of the Government at the disposal of the Task Force. This is a non-government Conference -- bear this in mind right down the line. Craig do you have anything to add?

Christensen:

He has covered it, except that I would say, in your work just go back and emphasize how to do it. The Council would like specific recommendation on what ought to be done, who ought to do it, and how it ought to be done in the area of Economic Security and Welfare and come up with answers to all of these things. I think the Council would rather have some depth work done in some areas rather than to spread it too thin in the priorities you decide to establish.

Christensen:

Q: For the purposes of planning for the Council meeting on April 1 and 2, is the Task Force expected to take into the meeting "how-to-do-it" or concentrate at the first meeting on "what to do?"

Craig:

How much you can actually do in that time? Be as specific as possible.

Henderson:

Mr. Mirengoff and Mr. Shostack and I have talked and we feel strongly that rather than trying to come up with a document that would describe our notions about how, who, etc., what we could do would be to lay out in outline fashion the broad areas we would have for the Council, what we have concluded, the priorities. It was decided that by April 1st we could do the job and feed back to the Council the recommendations, not only on who, what, and how, in terms of correcting, but also the areas we have not touched on between April 1 and June 1, the structural organization. Do we move in the direction of how the Conference should be organized for Economic Security, the difference in that point and the previous point. We will be structuring and recommending to the Council the priorities and content. We also recommend our notions as to the best way we can work with this between April 1 and June 2, how to organize our work.

Henderson:

Sylvester:

The Council has decided tentatively that it wants all work and paper work prepared for mailing to the Conference invitees about mid-May. This give you an idea of where you are shooting. By this next Saturday we need the primary problems from the staff . We recognize the difficulty of circumstance of form . Practically, after the meeting of April 2 everybody should know where we are going and the staff should take another look at problems for the structure. We don't know if it is possible to get more than one shot on how the subject should be dealt with. by the middle of May we expect to mail out papers.

Henderson:

At the April 2 meeting we should have the mandates they want to give to this Task Force. We may expect adjustments.

Sylvester:

The Council will then tell us what we have done that is good or bad.

Henderson:

The scope of priorities, support, etc.

Sylvester:

When the Council said they wanted a paper on Economic Security

Sylvester:

they did not define it... when you have 29 problems that it can focus on, debate about, accept, or reject.

Williams:

How and who will be involved. We address ourselves as to what we are going to do.

Henderson:

How to do it in terms of solutions of the problems; this task force deals with substance.

Fauntroy:

I would like to see some of the consultation go on before the Conference occurs. Can you suggest people who ought to be consulted about the feasibility of what you are proposing, what the Council considers valid and useful. You people to check out certain problems and where they would stand on certain kinds of problems. We want direction from you if this is to work, evaluate and what we want to present to the Council.

Henderson:

We are going to discuss all these facts before we break up, what we need to do before the April 1st meeting, to keep it on schedule. We are to pull together the kind of document you have (Shostack's paper), the problems on how to get at these basic problems, and the proposals from the November Conference.

HENDERSON:

Problems from other sources, other published documents from the various Government departments, other sources from academic scholars. In this document there are proposals from three sources. The November Conference within this structure, problems from outside, organize them into more or less "what" and "how." Some problems would have to be addressed through administrative channels, some legislative procedure, others through private action - churches, hospitals etc. We thought we would address ourselves to this kind of document initially.

The second step - if this group can examine these items, and conclude that we would identify the dozen items we felt should be priorities, these we would present to the Council on April 1 and 2, and if the Council goes along with this, we could get out of these priority items - say, six items of priorities - we would begin to organize resources for April 2 through the May 15 period for presentation to the Conference.

The third step would be assignment of papers to outside consultants; organize the content into a structure that Council indicates for the June 1-2 Conference. Our mission is to examine these papers and make modifications, additions, and abstracts in Mr. Shostack's papers, which will be presented to the April 1 Council meeting.

Henderson:

We have an item about Minimum Wage. There may be some questions whether we need to take any time to do work on the minimum wage law. What may be more important would be if we take the concept of negative income tax, show not as a potential solution, but as terms of those impacts. What benefit can we expect from this?

We think negative income tax is good to correct problems. We will omit what we think we should not take time on. We are not saying we have everything in this document, we can bring other things into to it.

? We have added the last few pages this morning, pages 20,21,22. A recommendation on the preparation of a comprehensive, structured program to meet overall needs for manpower services, prepared a kind of manpower budget and using this to develop a very comprehensive and structured program over a number of areas.

Henderson:

Note the organization of this paper. It is broken down into what has been suggested as basic compenents, through legislative and administrative action, stressing job opportunities, improving Federal subsidies , Federal subsidized programs, equipping people with skills, special needs of certain groups where it is important. Identify additional programs, services and resources needed to fill gaps, location of programs.

Henderson:

The non-government approaches, private and other, to improve employment situation of Negroes.

Strengthen recruitment and job development programs., programs for rural Negroes.

Are there any major areas omitted here?

Perkins: I have now a first draft of a paper to present for your use next April. It includes each of the items numbered here. I wrote a paper and the overlap is so close I would think that anything we would have in our paper would be a matter of detail on the observation of the problems and specifics related to it. "How-to-do-it" from us. In the draft this covers income, security and welfare services in relation to economic security and other problems. I assume from this, since it is Economic Security and Welfare, the primary emphasis is on economic security among whatever you want to define as poor groups or minority groups.

Christensen:

To what extent do we want to develop recommendations that will continue welfare assistance? We want to deal with economic security. The question is, problems that really put welfare in a new context that we think in terms ...income maintenance, kinds of problems are a welfare measure. Is it just a welfare measure or will it move people from a welfare state? Conduct programs to make them more accountable

Christensen:

Task Force, but a lot has to be done by some other task forces. Specifically, what ought to be done in Economic Security as implemented for welfare. What will probably happen it will lead to some communication between the Task Forces when we get to the point they are moving along. The recommendations you have in housing and education will be helpful. Present a paper referring to it.

When you get into the area of Education as it relates to training this is not our preserve. They can get into it but we don't touch it. If you are to narrow down education as it relates to training; training is that which is not done in the schools as part of education. Training and re-training for some purposes other than in a public school building. Not related to education. You are definitely going to get some overlap in institutions in training.

Henderson:

The matter of training manpower program. You have to glean a jurisdiction when it comes to broad education policy; what is wrong with the school system?

Q: What about vocational education in the public school system? We can out here from jurisdictional rights ...

Christensen:

You are safe in saying you can for purposes of the meeting April 1 and 2. After that I would hope that at some level the two would be separated.

Q: The economic security work you are talking about are those people who can take jobs and supplement their income, people who can be trained and do not have such family responsibilities. Separate groups - the aged, some are incapacitated physically - for that group you have a different welfare. Those people drawing public assistance and welfare payment.

Many of these people are totally unemployable because of age, some with families, family responsibilities and have very little education.

Henderson:

We want the impact of a proposed program. What can we expect in a transition? How far can we get? Do you expect it to get larger?

Perkins: By a complex of other programs, related, improved, and more accountable for education of the young.

Henderson:

Training for employment and education. Are we going to draw a hard line of demarcation?

Christensen:

We could cover their education by doing work in depth. It is so easy to be talking about economic security, but really the solution is education. When you are talking about education, someone else says this is "housing." It is the purpose of this or more acceptable?

Henderson:

The traditional acquisition is that they have kept people on welfare. Is that our objective?

Q: How do we relate the concept of negative income tax? Is it a disguised welfare approach to the income problem?

A: In the area of both economic security and welfare you need... what is economic security? How do you achieve it? Like the aged, the very young - those under six years of age - the women, mothers. The youth where it will be a long time before they are self supporting. I would say personally the number of choices you have is almost infinitesimal. This must be done on a level of accuracy. The intention to do it, and what you are to do is the important decision that has to be made.

Fauntroy:

Are we not thinking in terms of transition from welfare programs, the people, and the kind of program? Are we not talking in terms of attaching to welfare the depth of economic security? Funds which now go to welfare maintenance on a grand basis are now paid to them for re-defined work. Teachers assistance. Union. We are not talking about a specific program, we must get components of welfare and make useful participation by persons to society. Through a re-definition of work, make them feel they are a part of society, task forces can talk about that.

If we both added resources, I see no great harm done.

Henderson:

If we emphasize how we are going to get the job done. Identify the problem by two task forces which might overlap. It really does. make a great deal of difference.

Christensen:

The point of extensive staff work.

Fauntroy:

The education task force, skills, how we improve the development of skills as they develop and some understanding of what the Conference is going to consider in both these areas - the Manpower development and Training Act. They come together and work together. The other relationship is basic education. You can't develop employability unless you have manpower development.

Henderson:

You left off comments of what was needed. We had a category on which comments were made. Suggested what was needed insofar as initial judgment in order for us to be clear and to get the kind of understanding here. I suggest two things: Are you satisfied with what ...what additions can we make with the components that have been isolated here? One component of "Discrimination" and one of "Job Creation."

Henderson:

We have components of subsidizing training programs and equipment of skills. I think the major points are there. The coincidence between items is remarkable.

Q: Is this the best way for us to define the components? We ought to divide them according to characteristics, youth, older workers, those out of the labor force..evaluate this procedure, an identification of opportunities, job opportunities. We should keep this basic here because it emphasizes solutions. Otherwise,

A I think all of us who work in this field have a host of figures, what kind of data is lacking in here to support the job and the actions required on any of these? It is not a question so much of lack of information where the gaps are, lack of concerted public support for some of the recommendations. There are certain things in these recommendations which people feel could be .... in a sense giving more back up support.

Shostack:

We had for each an indication where we would go to seek back up support, the Welfare Organization, OEO - another is Labor.

There doesn't seem to be anything on economic security. One of the other items - Government programs and policy - should constantly be geared to the achievement of economy.

Q: Do we need a set of recommendations in this area? ...worried about going into the depth of it. I think experimentation ought to be placed along with or in the minimum wage field, specifics.

Henderson:

Perkins: We ought to have expansion of coverage. Do we really have any data on what industries would be affected by the minimum wage, the number of Negroes in these low wage industries. If we raise this minimum wage, how many people would be disemployed? Then we can go on and we can have special programs for unemployed. ...it will disemploy people..how many would be disemployed? What are the job programs for those people, etc.?

A: From a standpoint of solution, our concern would be impact of the minimum wage, expansion and coverage for raising it. an x number of persons would be disemployed. What kind of programs? Particular programs, achievement programs.

Christensen:

In preliminary discussions we had before organization - one problem presented - some people hope would be considered by this group. It was called "the problem of the last hired, the first fired." This is the time to be talking about employment, the war time economy. How do you prepare for a peace time economy? In a war time economy there are people who have gotten jobs and are the first ones to go.

A. We have a contingency program.

A. You need a national program with income security. Conduct a training program if they are working. These are the basic points. Those concerned exclusively with the growth of the economy, to absorb. This should be the peace time program. Push this. Increase their capabilities which will reduce their limitations and give whole new power on the job... by pushing this you help them prepare for the period by increasing their skills.

Upgrading of skills. Here's what we have got:

a. Attack discrimination.

b. Create job opportunities.

c. Occupational training programs.

d. Youth.

e. Fill gaps.

f. Non-government.

You might as well add women, especially mothers. You should add the rural group for the job program. The Negro youth is a special problem. The fact still remains that there are many people in older groups who havn't had an education, so you need education for older groups.

The rural Negro could be broaden to rural development. Special rural Negro problem is the fact that they live in the South, and the South isn't a viable economic union, I mean unit. Treat it like technical aid programs. Traditionally is the discrimination he has gotten at the lowest level of life which is the whole problem, economic problem. We need programs for youth and insecurity.

Henderson:

We want to push for the alternatives we have, whether we address the solutions under these kinds of components- women or older people, job opportunities for all Negroes are here under these items, we may assume. We pull out youth or substitute under other categories. I think you can make a case and figure this out. The whole rural development problem and migration of rural Negroes to the cities.

Nicol:

Education, health, and responsibilities. Keep it out until convinced you can fit it in to other categories. Younger people.. things relating to the drop-out problem. People who think persons who work are skilled. You have to get at the motivation problem for persons migrating to the cities, and the psychological problem. You must find out the psychological reason some move to the cities. This is an area you can't ignore.

Take d and e. Pulling together from many sources....many of these things are too small to warrant the attention of the Conference. One major problem the Negro faces when he moves away from the country and migrates to the city is unemployment. What shall we do to lick this problem, the problem of people who migrate from rural areas to cities and have no place to live. What do we do for them?

A third problem is the lack of advanced work skills. The problem of the unemployed, problems of the employed. There are always a few that will not fit in any category.

Newman:

Whether we are thinking about attacking discrimination - from what point of view, and whether the various items under the "attack discrimination" were sufficiently large. Also, creation of job opportunities. We might think more in terms of broadening them.

What needs to be done for everyone and up-grade their skills. You could get a group of three or four broad areas which would include these in limited kinds of approaches. In the case of discrimination I am thinking that the reason that people discriminate is because they are ill informed. This is a basic problem and may be an education problem, but I think also a labor problem and an economic security problem. I am thinking of economic status and no job. Job opportunities can only be created when we want to do them.

Henderson:

This is the guide we are given. Develop the circumstances that we want to present to the Council on Saturday, so they will have some sense of direction.

Fauntroy:

The Education task force is given considerable thought as we attempt to change the whole picture of discrimination.

Henderson:

We should address educational problems to employers and Union officials, which would be within their province. When we talk about discrimination, we might want to suggest that this is an important avenue of approach. The establishment of local councils... does anyone know the extent or number?

Christensen:

There are supposed to be about 60. I am sure there are 60 not going strongly.

We need a bigger thrust from rural areas.

Plans for Progress is available to assist this Task Force.

Perkins:

In the Civil Rights Act, isn't there a provision which says what Federal programs should be examined in relation to the way they are defined by Congress... the potential for discrimination is built in. In attacking discrimination we could talk about that which is legal and built into the law..in terms of its effect on Negroes as compared with white groups. We could reexamine or make a recommendation that part of the civil rights law be applied to reexamine programs. I could talk about this for two hours.

Q: Could you put this down in writing?
A: Yes.

In this way you are looking for a new fresh approach. The first three items are very classic. Attack discrimination; create job opportunities and improve occupational training programs. Coming up with the first three, we would not be adding anything fresh or novel to the subjects that have received attention.

In terms of policy recommendations are things under organization such as OEO operations.

Full employment and economy ideas. Tie in idea of what you do about reconversion of the economy. What special element got us below 4%? Was it Vietnam? Put your best thinking to attack "last hired, first fired." It all ties up. Do we want a specific paper under Discrimination in Employment.

Item A on page 2: The kinds of things said about Federal legislation. Are they applicable?

There are charges that the County Agent is actively against Negro persons trying to get a loan for agricultural purposes.

Q: How about two state and rural programs?

Programs financed by Federal funds. The whole area of state and county and local is untouched.

Insure minority group representation in decision making and staffing of government agencies.

Q: Is there enough emphasis being placed on Negroes being unable to get loans because of discrimination of Federal programs or Federal agencies. I am told that in the South it is impossible to be a successful Negro. Regarding 4 H groups, there is not a single non-white 4 H organization in the South. None of the kinds of training available to youngsters who grow up on white farms are made available to non-white youngsters.

Fauntroy:

We focus constantly on the Department of Agriculture and it is zeroing in on this kind of problem.

Williams:

There is too much thrust in .....on the one hand we have a discrimination problem for which we need to address a solution. What kind of a solution do we want to offer for Negroes who want to stay and some incentive for them to stay in rural areas. What can we propose.

A: I argue that they want to get out of the rural areas.

Q: Can we differentiate between solutions for those who want to stay in rural areas and who those want to migrate.

There is a discussion by Dr. Maddox addressed to those who remain and those who leave.

There is a whole new effort for regional economic development.. is that some people will stay. Most people do not migrate. We work on the subject that should do the most for people who do not.

Q: You say that people do not migrate?

A: I believe that more people stay than migrate.

Q: More migrate out than in. I am talking about Negroes.

The question is more than 50% of the people...they are constantly migrating out.

Williams:

The question is why they migrate out or remain?

You are going to have enough people remaining so that you must have regional development programs.

Nicol:

Isn't it true with a new concept we should increase...there may be a possibility to up grade their conditions if they stay on a farm, if they are given advantages of economic opportunity?

Sheppard:

Talk about rural areas...do they stay as share groups, stay on their farms with grants...

The whole business of trying to attract industry into rural areas. Do you bring them into areas where the potential is white or Negro. How do you get to employers where people are primarily Negro?

A: ...there is EBA and SBA in those types of areas.

Henderson:

In context of solutions to the aspects of the problems we might want to identify this as the type of component under rural areas.

? There are two problems. Economic development where the Negro impact can be used; the availability of Federal support that has been developed for Negroes. Welfare programs, pinpointing the availability , heavy subsidizing economy and developing means of bringing in business to people.

Newman:

The rural Negro is largely in the South, the money he makes, the occupation he has..the problem becomes one of Negro farming but there is also the Negro who works off the farm. It is not only a local problem, but more a Southern problem.

Perkins:

I was disturbed at the Planning Conference - I was there as an observer and not a participant - when people talked about Negro rights and opportunities. You have to have freedom of opportunity, but you have to have freedom of choice. Those people do not choose to move to those fields. I think a woman should be free to take a job or stay at home with her children.

A: We need to address ourselves to the structure of incentives. .

A: We need the element of freedom of choice as well as freedom of opportunity.

Henderson:

People can't make any money in most states and get a welfare payment. There is no incentive for them to work because they lose the welfare payment. When you provide incentives for people to work you get to a self supporting state.

Perkins:

Sometimes it is sufficiently difficult to qualify for welfare. When you do become qualified, you run the risk of losing welfare payments if you take a job that doesn't work out, and run the risk of not getting back on welfare. The assistance standards are so low that work even at the lowest level of wages disqualifies you.

Q: Do you question the housing program?

A: At the Planning Session an activist mentioned "I would rather have any family I was interested in living in a rat infested basement."...

We can pull the solutions together in the kind of problems we want to discuss. We shall not push, but be concerned with a problem. Can you get your handle on the impact? How many people would it hit? What would be the final outcome in a period of time, say 10 years? The cost type benefit. Some things trusted to states...the states took away...resources must be considered under public law.Is there enough in this report on health generally or discussion of health?

A: There is a task force on the subject.

Henderson:

It is basically agreed these things give you basic power for organized opportunities. Are we in a position to set up some priorities for the task force to be working on between now and the first of April? What should we have ready for April 1?

Some solutions in the whole area of general health and economics. Do we have to say something about discrimination.

Christensen:

At the outset in this document you have some more sensitive areas. Its great that this (document) is this far along. What they have done...the step they have attempted is some broad grouping; others have been sensitive and have addressed themselves to the agenda for the Council meeting; others have taken a broad grouping. Typically what has happened..there was no votes taken. No voting.

If you choose four or five items they will talk about it in detail.

Henderson:

Let's assume that we organize these and add two or three items. We take these 14 and list 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. If we presented it in this format, is this desirable for that kind of application?

Christensen:

I think so. We contemplated as a staff there was going to be some real selectivity. There were too many people to identify, too many involved by this task force. Our agenda should focus on new ideas.. very few things have come out.

Hendersen:

Restate to give five items of priorities.

Christensen:

It would be helpful to get some broad groupings.

Fauntroy:

One of the most attractive items to some people on the Council would be a paper on "creating job opportunities". The Civil Rights people say we have to have more jobs in terms of work. Jobs for people able to work and willing to work. Our economy has risen to a higher level since 1960. You have high unemployment rates. We need to find job opportunities...creating of job opportunities to do this.

Secondly, the concepts of providing jobs for and to improve the employability of hard core unemployed; the hard core unemployed reduces when there are openings around. We ought to start with the concept that there ought to be jobs. We can have jobs under pressure of the Vienam situation. Put this type into the public assistance concepts. With job opportunities you still have welfare, but what is the motivation of the youth. If you could assure them of jobs. Item 4 on page 3.

Sheppard:

We ought to indicate strongly that they shouldn't be satisfied with low employment rates and Negro structures of employment.

Perkins:

Many do work under this risk of going on and off. They scrub floors and clean streets, etc. Some work for under $60 a month.

Q: There is no maximum they can make?

A: Some work and are given assistance. Many work... like in New York cleaning streets, or ones who have gone off in the summer who pick cotton and apples and come back in the fall. They work for amazingly low wages.

Q: How do you want to guide the staff on this? In terms of organizing material for presentation to the Council on April 1 and 2? Do you feel you ought to present all of these items or reorganize under four or five headings? Do you feel this kind of pin-pointing is better than trying to do a paper which has some illustration and statement of the problems?

If we tackle a couple that we agree are important one it is something we think could be handled. We could always say look at minimum wage legislation for the task force. Labor standards thinking. We ought to take "Attack on Discrimination" and present some extensive inquiries before the Conference. Some inquires should be made of the present administrative and legislative set up.

We were enjoined to come up with specific suggestions. The solutions will fall in this category, some through administrative procedure and channels. See that you have enough laws, enough representative policy to get it through the administrative channels. Others would require representative new laws. On the job training from both public and private sources and subsidizing training opportunities. We need policies in last resort employment. In some of these areas we define the solution and in processing we are also suggesting the channel through which these solutions have to be approached.

Hendersen:

We are going to this Council next week. We want your proposals in the areas we ought to try and examine and come up with solutions as well as some specific illustrations.

Christensen:

Give some illustrations and hear some possibilities.

Christensen:

I believe we have an agenda problem.

Henderson:

First of all I believe it would be extremely helpful if the document could be in their hands before they get there. If that is possible, then you would have hundreds of alternatives. You could then select priorities and talk about 4 or 5 of them.

For April 1. There is so much you can get out of the April 1 meeting. You can't give a definite analysis. We might restructure this document to send out on a preliminary basis and bring in additions we have selected out of this.

Christensen:

Send with the document with brief changes today.

For the agenda:

I. Job Creation

Plus these areas and legislation and administration.

You deal with developing jobs, rural industries, or job redefinition.

a. Rural industries

b. Job redefinition

c. Youth

II. Attack Discrimination

A. Federal structures into industry

B. Private industry

C. Labor

III. Job Training

You have to have more jobs available to Negroes and if you have more jobs, then training is not as important. In Germany they are employing people from Italy, so language is not a barrier, they are able to train them.

IV. Gaps - Minimum Economic Security

Henderson:

We are in step 1 - to develop a list of recommendations for consideration by the Conference. This list is to be based on the recommendations of the Planning Session plus new ideas and is to be completed by April 2.

Step 2 is the staff is to collect background information, including statistics, proposed programs, recommendations to the Council what we think would be a good procedure. We want to get the material necessary for this meeting.

Step 3, we would prepare one page summaries for each recommendation to be presented to the Conference June 1 and 2, recommendations, and the actions necessary to implement these recommendations, specific legislative action, administrative action, impact, coverage, cost, the pros and cons of the recommendations.

At 12:30 the meeting adjourned until 1:30 p.m.

The meeting reconvened at 1:30 p.m.

Henderson:

I. Job Creation

We should present our views on what we think the content should be in terms of discussions or solutions to these problems. Presumably we will have a rather detailed discussion with them as to give and take , the whys, we have this part of the Conference.

This Task Force will meet again on April 1, begining at 4:00 p.m. and spill over to the next day. We could get here a couple of hours before meeting with the Council. If we could meet from 3:30 to 5:30 and have a session.

Q: I won't be able to be here, I have another meeting that day.

Q: How do you feel about sending a substitute?

Christensen:

If the task force wanted to do that. It wouldn't be necessary. Representatives of the task force are here to present and discuss the problems . We would have on the agenda so many hours set aside to deal with "Job Creation", time for questions and answers.

Henderson:

We would meet here at 4:00 p.m. April 1. Second, we do not really know how we want to present the agenda to them. We have to decide this between now and April 1.

Christensen:

Do you want us to make up the agenda?

Henderson:

Yes. Do that with Ed. (Sylvester)

The possible approach for staff work is only concerned with April 2. We have a step by step arrangement. We are now in step 1. What we are doing in step one is to get prepared by April 2. We would like to see what recommendation we are really dealing with we now want to leave out; the kind of papers; data we want to gather when we come to mid-May mailing, then we can get to step 3. We want two page summary sheets for each recommendation we want to deal with. What we will do from A through F. This is the basis for presentation of this section to members of ;the White House Conference - recommendations, action necessary to implement the recommendation, specific legislative action and administrative action, necessary arrangements with employers and labor unions, etc.; need for proposed services.

Job Creation.

We need a program setting forth legislation. One page on rural, one page on jobs, etc. We also thought when we were in step 2 we could get the thinking to a point of a 5 page document with 20 recommendations. We need to take them and examine them and assign them to 10 or 20 people, each to a cross section of people and let them give us a one page reaction and we would incorporate it somewhere and have it become part of the document. We need to get participation outside the task force. We meet with the Council next weekend and go over ours. In the meantime we should be receiving the one page summary on the 20 recommendations to channel to 10 to 20 people. Each report back no later than May 1, in order to give the staff two weeks to work on them. We would have about three weeks at the most to do step 2, until April 25. Get the enthusiasm about the concept of the panel; get reactions and their thinking before they get there.

I think we can get reactions on Saturday that they ought to know, that is the kind of thinking we have in the back of our minds.

If rural areas, we can get 8 to 10 people to give us a quick reaction from a cross section of people. We are going to reword this.

We do not want reactions from Federal agencies.

Q: Do you utilize Federal agencies as resouces?

A: We want papers from outside the Government.

I. Job Creation

A. Rural industry

B. Job redefinition

C. Youth

A becomes II

B becomes I

C to be put in III

D becomes part of I

E becomes IV

F -

1. Go under I

   Job creation

   Job locations

2. 1 can go under I

   private employment

3. Discrimination and training

   Take 3

   a would be under II

   b. beginning with "develop"

4. Employers to work potential should be under I opportunities for upgrading and training. You are asking employers "Why don't you take a new look?" In other areas here we are talking about upgrading and promotions. We are also talking about looking at the potential the man has.

Nicol: Simply put down two reasons involved. In the work we have been doing we have developed papers suggesting a greater emphasis be made on up-grading these now built into the program. The theory being is that if we can move some of the semi-skilled workers up to skilled jobs. Take them off the streets and try to train them.

5 should be under II

6 should be under II

7 should be under I

Strengthen Recruitment and job development programs for minority groups - the statement job creation does.

You could use I so long as you discuss it comprehensively.

Union resources and development program.

Technical information and assistance program - II

1 - I
2 - III
3 - II

Improve public assistance and welfare program. On the recommendations should it be a small number or larger. If larger, should we try to give it a new structure?

A: Expand the potential to benefit and who should do it? Should it be done under the auspices of welfare? Under Labor? or where? If we have someone develop a paper on this particular subject, he should be given a mandate, saying we are interested in this paper, and want to know what welfare concepts are presently operating.

On page 12, d should be II

Henderson: We ourselves want to give a particular thrust where an important impact will be in solving problems. We are thinking of occupational training.

Page 12 d ..... operation of Federal state employment services. They ought to be doing a better job.

2 should go under H.

I, page 14, Programs for Rural Negroes. The rural situation will all be placed under item I.

Present employment orientation. Expand training and present employment, sort of programs, support of pre-employment devices; talk about achievement processes.

I - programs

1 - I

2.a. should be III - present employment services

3. Expand the labor mobility demonstration program under MDTA... this is really relocation. We have the ability to give resources and grants to federally financed relocation programs and individuals.

3. Expand the labor III

4. I

5. Improve agricultural labor standards - put under IV. Extension of Workmen's Compensation, and unemployment insurance to agricultural workers.

Page 16 - for those employed. Employment, paying jobs and opportunities. People not employed should get some kind of income.

Q: Page 16. J - 1, 2,3. Should we really talk about our basic guarantees and assistance?

1. Employment situation for the Negro.

2. How large could the minimum wage be? There should be a a certain minimum income, a minimum standard for which we should work. It has broader economic implications too. You could talk about extension of unemployment insurance.

Q. Combine 5 and 6 under J, or keepd separate?

A. Keep 5 and item J separate.

Q: Where do we put 5; and where do we put J?

A. If you call IV Human Resources Development, 5 goes under IV.

Henderson:

We need jobs for rural farm Negroes. Come up with a set of recommendations to subsidize farming as an industry among Negroes. What are we going to do about farm occupations and industry? When we talk about job creation, this possibly could come here. Could we get into item I Negro farm operators?

Put a component in here on Negro farmer as an operator; farming as an occupation or business, and then as the staff we will try to get a handle on it and some solutions to these problems.

Newman:

There are two places this could follow, the first being that under b. 2.; and, secondly, under "Discrimination" where you are going to get a spectrum of things, in cost to the farmer and other things. Take the case of the Negro veteran here. He forms his own operation and got GI training. He did this with white veterans, however, when he went out to get a GI loan, it was a smaller loan in porportion. We have to indicate areas of Federal, state, and local discrimination. We can do it in respect to the farm and small business loans. Get it in here where we can propose new avenues to solving this problem, and to correct discrimination practices; new solutions to become effective, plus outside subsidizing.

A. This is good.

Q. There are two specific items as an illustration among the list of recommendations. I am wondering whether you would want a brief moment or two....

We are trying to operate in this show by a con census; we are still groping for alternatives, pros and cons. We might come up with some other alternatives, that is why we put number 5..

You ought to send these in.

We ought to develop recommendations a little more... particularly the implementation services, recommendations to the Commission on technique and .

2. The tax credit for training - I wonder if it is a very solid measure in terms of technical aspects of tax credit. Would it be for specific training or to subsidize companies who are already doing the training. I would like to get this into the hopper.

Henderson:

When we go up before the Council, we are not saying these are solutions, we are recommending; they will want to present papers for the White House Conference. There is this point of view - these are the things that are important and we need to prepare them and get a draft.

There is a suggestion here on tax credit to stimulate training for industry.

Henderson:

We will not be making a presentation on Friday evening but on Saturday only. Will the members of this task force be able to be here at 4:00 p.m. on April 1?

On the whole business of discrimination, I would hope we would have orientation, individual complaints and particulars from whatever agency is able to do this on its own initiative; have a broad scale investigation of what is going on. We also need a pertinent paper on wage hour violations. We will ask the staff to isolate and develop our components in some sort of priorities. Bring before the Council a document structured along these lines and simply say that the solutions to the problems of economic security are within these priorities that we are presenting to you. We do not have all the pros and cons, but we can suggest to you why we think these are priorities. Between April 2nd and June 1 we will develop substantive material to support the pros and cons.

Emory Via:

Most of the recommendations are good. If I have to establish priorities of Discrimination in Employment, number 5, why not change it to "Prohibitive Discrimination". I would argue it is more important to get into administration this kind of initiative from the complaint areas. I would like to see a provision that takes us down to one employer or one union man.

A: I think really it is awfully hard to answer this kind of thing.

Henderson:

Here are the four areas. Frankly, we are only in a position to suggest right now that these five items constitute priorities under the section of discrimination. What we are saying is that we just can't define the details of priorities, only the areas of problems.

Q: At what point does the task force make a decision?

A: I hope that, as we leave here, you will review these papers and communicate right to Colonel McKenzie on your ideas. Our stamp of approval on it will be next Friday.

Two groups have prepared substantive documents on capital, manpower, resources, budget, etc. There are some concerns around these areas. Much of it covers education and the housing area. There is a whole structure of views and social changes. We do intend to incorporate this.

Mirengoff:

One way would be to recognize the proposal or suggestion and indicate that in the area of job security and welfare. Many of the proposals will be incorporated and put together a structured package.

Henderson:

We need a paper that can be circulated before the Conference and be prepared to discuss all the issues and problems at hand. I appreciate your coming. This has been a long day. We will be in touch between now and Friday.

The meeting adjourned at 4:00 p.m.

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

March 28, 1966

To : Members
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

From: Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare Vivian W. Henderson/jmb

1. Minutes of the meeting of March 25 are under preparation and will be mailed to you within the next day or so.

2. The Task Force will hold its second meeting Friday afternoon, April 1 at 4 P.M., 1901 Pennsylvania Avenue, Room 301. The purpose of the meeting is to prepare for the meeting with the Conference Council Saturday, April 2.

3. On Saturday, April 2, 10:30 A.M. the Task Force will meet with the Council in the Executive Office Building of the White House. At that time the Council will receive from the Task Force proposals in the area of economic security and welfare.

4. Enclosed is a copy of the initial draft of the document that will provide the basis of our recommendations. You will recall that the document is undergoing revision as a result of discussions in our first meeting.

5. I am also enclosing a list of Task Force members and members of the staff.

Encls 3

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

March 29, 1966

MEMORANDUM

To: Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

From: Dorothy K. Newman, Member of the Staff DKN

Subject: Content and Format of the Report for Saturday, April 1

To meet the test imposed by the Council in past sessions and the optimum requirements outlined by Mr. Christensen that would lead to fewer items and greater depth in the presentation of those proposed, it may be desirable

1. To group suggestions and develop each group and its parts in terms of need, feasibility, cost, impact, and legislative history.

2. To present a time table for introduction and final accomplishment of the goal.

The present design is clear and useful as a means of summary, but allows the documentation required only if enough space is permitted at the left for developing the rationale and at the right for showing how the legislation or administrative action is to take place, and what the cost, and economic and personal or social impact will be.

The program proposals do not include many made within the Department of Labor itself for the Council of Economic Advisers, the Office of Economic Opportunity, and others, some of which are especially relevant, and the format and content of which might be helpful.

Major recommendations having a huge economic impact, such as the negative income tax, appear to receive equal weight with additions to training programs already in operation.

Recommendations that are alike or could be substitutes for one another are listed separately, as, for instance, family allowances and the negative income tax. Either is complex and requires substantive development to preclude unnecessary discussion.

Gaps in the list are, for instance, major measures to improve income security, such as removing or reducing the payroll tax among low-wage workers; envolving a system of National, State, and local goals for services to expand job opportunities; provisions for low-income housing and a substantial program of rehabilitation that could penetrate the construction apprenticeship system; programs to reduce seasonality of employment which especially affect Negro workers; etc. etc.

The most significant omissions I find are in the areas of basic economic proposals to ensure full employment and occupational advances; proposals that help erase and combat discrimination; and needed welfare programs.

Perhaps expected proposals from others will fill these gaps and you are doubtless aware of them as well as many other items that could be added.

Let me know how I can help.

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

March 30, 1966

To : Members
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

From: Vivian W. Henderson
Chairman

Vivian W. Henderson/jmb

1. Enclosed you will find an unedited version of proceedings of the meeting on March 25. There are several inaccuracies in the minutes. Despite this, I believe the minutes provide useful information and should be helpful as we prepare for the April 1 meeting of the Task Force. In particular I call your attention to the second half of the proceedings beginning about page 18. This portion of the minutes is concerned with some of the concrete suggestions for the work of the Task Force.

2. We have requested Government Transportation orders for the April 1 meeting which have been sent under separate cover.

For discussion purposes only

PRELIMINARY LIST OF ACTION POSSIBILITIES

For Consideration by the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

March 31, 1966
2nd Draft

I

The faster the American economy is able to offer employment opportunities at a livable wage to all who need jobs, the faster minority groups will be able to reach a desirable level of economic security. While the nation intensifies its efforts to achieve this objective the following constructive actions should be undertaken since they likewise contribute significantly to improve the economic security of minority groups.

Recommendations	Action Needed

Reaching & Sustaining

I. ~~MAINTAINING~~ A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY

The effectiveness of measures to improve the economic security and welfare of minority groups depends, to a very large extent, on ~~the~~ reaching and maintenance of a healthy, growing, full employment economy. Measures to achieve this condition should continue to receive the widest support. In addition, measures should be considered to help minority group members retain their gains during any periods of recession that might occur.

Federal legislative action supported by labor and industry.

Include tax policy –

& additional

II. CREATE NEW JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUPS

B. Establish a ~~permanent~~ federally subsidized public employment program to provide constructive and socially useful employment for jobless & underemployed workers in such categories as:

Federal legislative action aimed at utilizing State and local government and community non-government organizational resources.

1. Workers who require work experience, training & ~~and~~ supplemental services to ~~develop needed skills to~~ increase their employability.

2. Workers of low skill and educational attainment who lack potential for higher-skill occupations and who have a need for a last-resort source of gainful employment.

3. Workers who are only temporarily unemployed, need additional income, but do not qualify for unemployment insurance or for other income maintenance programs.

4. Workers engaged in seasonal industries such as agriculture, forestry, construction, or fishing, who can be helped by providing a regular program of off-season employment to supplement their primary jobs.

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Workers who need special assistance in the job market, such as older workers, nonemployable relief recipients, or the mentally and physically handicapped, ~~and~~ who can benefit from useful employment under carefully supervised conditions.
B. Thoroughly evaluate and modify local transportation routes and facilities to give minority groups access to the widest possible range of jobs in the job market.	Local and national legislative and administrative action.
C. Institute a program of federal wage supplements as incentives to employers to hire, train, and upgrade workers who are at a special disadvantage in the job market.	Federal legislative action

Recommendations	Action Needed
D. Encourage "Negro-owned business enterprises" by:
1. Increasing the availability of federal loans, grants, and technical assistance. ~~in appropriate geographic areas~~ and ~~categories of enterprises~~.	Federal legislative and administrative action.
2. Assistance from non-government sources for Negroes starting or operating business enterprises, including the extension of franchises to nonwhites and the encouragement of joint ventures by white and nonwhite businessmen.	Private industry.
E. Develop and aggressively administer a program to improve job opportunities for Negroes in rural-farm areas including:	Federal legislative and administrative action.
1. A federally subsidized program of employment on socially useful jobs in rural areas during the off-season.
2. Aggressive administration of community development programs to ~~bring~~ create new industry to rural areas through financial incentives, improvement of community facilities, and the training of local rural workers.	without encouraging non-farm
3. Experimentation with the economic development district approach authorized under the Public Works and Economic Development Act.
4. Experiments with measures to structure the job market for migratory and other seasonal farm workers so as to provide year-round employment and build a skilled and stable farm work force. This would include efforts to develop combinations of complementary seasonal farm and nonfarm jobs, major changes in recruitment and transportation facilities,

Recommendations	Action Needed
arrangements for central assignment of workers to a succession of temporary jobs by the employment service and by associations of employers, and other experimental approaches.
5. Develop an experimental-demonstration program of assistance to Negro farm operators, including means and incentives to successfully operate and gain ownership of farms through a combination of loans, grants, educational and vocational training, counseling, technical assistance, ~~and~~ provision of complementary off-season or part-time off-farm job opportunities.
6.
A ~~B~~. Positive efforts by private and public employers to improve job opportunities for Negro workers including:	Private employers and employer associations, assisted by minority group organizations, government agencies, and labor unions. Possible legislative incentives.
5 ~~1~~. Location of new establishments in areas accessible to Negro workers.
~~2~~. Modification of job duties to facilitate the employment of low-skilled workers.
3. Review of job requirements to eliminate unrealistic educational and test specifications.
2 ~~4~~. Positive recruitment of minority groups in special cooperative programs with government agencies and minority organizations.
1 ~~5~~. Systematic reviews of the work potential of nonwhites on their present staff to insure full use of their potential and to encourage upgrading.
6 Senior programs should be ~~language~~ undertaken by local, state, and, federal agencies.

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

TASK FORCE MEETING ON ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

April 2, 1966

PRELIMINARY LIST OF ACTION POSSIBILITIES

Presented to the Planning Council
White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights"
by the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

April 2, 1966

Recommendations	Action Needed

I. REACHING AND SUSTAINING A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY

The faster the American economy is able to offer employment opportunities at a livable wage to all who need jobs, the faster minority groups will be able to reach a desirable level of economic security. While the nation intensifies its efforts to achieve this objective the following constructive actions should be undertaken since they likewise can contribute significantly to improve the economic security of minority groups.

Federal legislative action supported by labor and industry.

Recession policies

II. CREATE NEW AND ADDITIONAL JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUPS

A. Positive efforts by private employers to improve job opportunities for Negro workers including:

1. Systematic reviews of the work potential of nonwhites on their present staff to insure full use of their potential and to encourage upgrading.

2. Positive recruitment of minority groups in special cooperative programs with government agencies and minority organizations.

3. Review of job requirements to eliminate unrealistic educational and test specifications.

description(?)

4. Modification of job duties to facilitate the employment of low-skilled workers.

Private employers and employer associations, assisted by minority group organizations, government agencies, and labor unions. Possible legislative incentives.

~~Recession policies~~

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Location of new establishments in areas accessible to Negro workers.
6. (Federal, State, and local agencies should undertake similar programs.)
B. Establish a ~~permanent~~ financed federally subsidized public employment program to provide constructive and socially useful employment for jobless and underemployed workers in such categories as:	Federal legislative action aimed at utilizing State and local government and community non-government organizational resources.
1. Workers who require work experience, training and supplemental services to develop needed skills to increase their employability.
2. Workers of low skill and educational attainment who lack potential for higher-skill occupations and who have a need for a last-resort source of gainful employment.
3. Workers who are only temporarily unemployed, need additional income, but do not qualify for unemployment insurance or for other income maintenance programs.
4. Workers engaged in seasonal industries such as agriculture, forestry, construction, or fishing, who can be helped by providing a regular program of off-season employment to supplement their primary jobs.
5. Workers who need special assistance in the job market, such as older workers, employable relief recipients, or the mentally and physically handicapped, who can benefit from useful employment under carefully supervised conditions.

Recommendations	Action Needed
C. Thoroughly evaluate and modify local transportation routes and facilities to give minority groups access to the widest possible range of jobs in the job market.	Local and national legislative and administrative action.
D. Encourage "Negro-owned business enterprises" by:
1. Increasing the availability of federal loans, grants, and technical assistance.	Federal legislative and administrative action
2. Assistance from non-government sources for Negros starting or operating business enterprises, including the extension of credit and franchises to nonwhites and the encouragement of joint ventures by white and nonwhite businessmen.	Private industry.
E. Develop and aggressively administer a program to improve job opportunities for Negroes in rural-farm areas including:	Federal legislative and administrative action.
1. A federally subsidized program of employment on socially useful jobs in rural areas during the off-season, such as beautification and highway improvement programs.
2. Aggressive administration of community development programs to create new industry in rural areas without creating unemployment elsewhere, through financial incentives, improvement of community facilities, and the training of local rural workers.

Recommendations	Action Needed
3. Experimentation with the economic development district approach authorized under the Public Works and Economic Development Act.
4. Experiments with measures to structure the job market for migratory and other seasonal farm workers so as to provide year-round employment and build a skilled and stable farm work force. This would include efforts to develop combinations of complementary seasonal farm and nonfarm jobs, major changes in recruitment and transportation facilities, arrangements for central assignment of workers to a succession of temporary jobs by the employment service and by associations of employers, and other experimental approaches.
5. Develop an experimental-demonstration program of assistance to Negro farm operators, including means and incentives to successfully operate and gain ownership of farms through a combination of loans, grants, educational and vocational training, counseling, and technical assistance.
6. Provision of complementary off-season or part-time off-farm job opportunities to supplement farm operator incomes.

Disc.

Recommendations	Action Needed
III. ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT IN BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTORS
A. Strengthen the administration of Title VII (prohibition of discrimination by employers and unions and employment agencies) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by:	Federal administrative action
1. Requesting more adequate budget and staff.
2. Establishing federal guidelines for tests used to evaluate current and prospective employees to insure that there are no artificial barriers to hiring and upgrading minority group members.
3. Emphasis on programs to upgrade the Negro work force through mandatory review of promotion programs and of seniority systems.
4. Emphasizing positive remedial action in conciliation agreements, including encouragement of special recruitment and on-the-job training programs, and alteration of underlying patterns and conditions.
5. Extensive use of complaints initiated by Commissioners to alter basic patterns of discrimination.
6. Expanding educational programs to reduce discrimination in employment.
7. Stressing affirmative action to change discrimination patterns through such means as informal conferences with employers who have failed to aggressively recruit, train, or promote nonwhites.

Disc.

Recommendations	Action Needed
8. Strengthen liaison with civil rights organizations including briefing sessions and special materials for their field workers.
9. Develop performance criteria and other enforcement aids through research and analysis of reports from employers and unions.
B. Amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including:	Federal legislative action
1. Expanding coverage to employees of state and local governments, private membership clubs, educational institutions, and employers and unions with 8 or more employees or members.
2. Authorizing the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue cease and desist orders.
3. Authorizing the EEOC to order monetary awards to persons suffering financial loss through denial of equal employment opportunity.

Dist-

Recommendations	Action Needed
C. Strengthen the administration of Executive Order 11246 (nondiscrimination on government contracts) by:	Federal administrative action
1. Compliance reviews prior to the award of government contracts.
2. Requiring the employer to demonstrate affirmative recruitment, training, and promotion action directed at insuring equal employment opportunity.
3. Establishing specific performance criteria for objective measurement of compliance.
4. Increasing compliance budget and staff, in federal agencies with compliance responsibilities.
D. Undertake effective enforcement of Title VI (prohibition on discrimination in state or local programs financed by federal funds) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964:	Federal administrative action
1. Expand staff and budget resources for enforcement.
2. Develop performance criteria and other enforcement aids.
3. Expand training programs for State and local staffs.

Disc.

Recommendations	Action Needed
4. Review Federal government economic assistance programs to insure nondiscriminatory administration. Utilize them in a positive manner to break existing area patterns of job and business discrimination; e.g.,
(a) Loan and technical assistance programs of the Department of Agriculture (recently surveyed by the Civil Rights Commission).
(b) Loan and grant programs under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.
(c) Activities of the Small Business Administration.
(d) Housing, urban renewal and other programs.
E. Develop more effective cooperation between federal, state, and local fair employment agencies.	Federal, state and local administrative action
F. Eliminate discrimination in employment in Federal, state, and local governments. The Federal government should become a model employer.	Federal, state, and local administrative action, supported by non-government community organizations

Disc

Recommendations	Action Needed
G. Conduct a comprehensive Government technical assistance program to help employers and unions develop capabilities for providing equal employment opportunities, to exchange information on the experience of employers and unions who have recently eliminated discriminatory practices, and to provide realistic guidance to employers and unions facing severe problems in complying with nondiscrimination policies.	Federal administrative action
H. Embark upon a massive educational program to reduce prejudice among employers, unions, government officials, workers, and the general population.	Federal legislative and administrative action add priority
1. Establish an appropriate office with specific responsibility for coordinating such a program, and with adequate staff and funds.
2. Develop effective educational materials for distribution to schools, unions, and employer associations.
3. Aggressively seek opportunities to present facts and ideas to groups of industry, labor, and other representatives.

Dist.

Recommendations	Action Needed
4. Develop and support special programs to create constructive racial attitudes among children and teenagers through school channels.
5. Develop nationwide educational programs for teachers, counselors, personnel directors, supervisors, and others who teach, select, or evaluate people.
6. Develop and utilize emblems, symbols, awards, contests, and related ideas to reward cooperating organizations, and to stimulate interest and pride in anti-discrimination activities.
7. Encourage establishment of local and State Equal Opportunity Councils to stimulate anti-discrimination efforts.
I. Insure minority group representation on State and local advisory, planning, and action committees under agricultural and vocational education, the MDTA, the Public Works and Economic Development Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, and other federally aided programs.	Federal administrative action

Dist.

5:45
4:40
4:15

Recommendations	Action Needed
J. Eliminate racial discrimination in apprenticeship programs:	Employers, labor unions, and Federal administrative action
1. Develop new techniques to recruit young Negroes into all craft unions.
2. Expand pre-apprenticeship training programs to help disadvantaged youths qualify for admission.
3. Revise selection criteria to eliminate unnecessary barriers which handicap minority group members.
K. Develop a well-publicized and systematic program to eliminate discriminatory employment practices in nonprofit organizations, and utilize the influence of such organizations by:	Action by nonprofit organizations and Federal administrative action
1. Working through national non-profit organizations to persuade local affiliates to drop discriminatory practices.
2. Persuading nonprofit organizations such as churches and hospitals to withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination.
3. Provision of technical assistance by national organizations to local affiliates to help them review hiring practices and standards and to engage in positive recruitment of minority group members.

Information Centers.

Recommendations	Action Needed
IV. HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES
A. A large scale effort to develop, stimulate, and implement training and upgrading programs by private employers, directed especially at disadvantaged workers:	Private industry: federal legislative action to provide incentives; support from labor unions
1. Introduce programs to encourage the reinvestment of gains from rising productivity into training and upgrading programs, both within and outside the plant.
2. Provide additional tax credits to stimulate in-plant education and training.	for New training –
3. Use Federal Government contracting authority to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with work on government contracts.
B. Develop and implement a comprehensive program for preparing disadvantaged youths for a productive place in the job market.	Federal, State and local administrative action
1. Greatly expand, update, and broaden high school vocational education programs, emphasizing training in new or growing occupations, utilizing the latest equipment, and closing the gap between the school and work settings.	Action by educational authorities and federal legislative action

Recommendations	Action Needed
2. Provide funds and training programs to sharply expand the number of counselors and counseling services for in-school youths, including efforts to motivate minority youths toward jobs in which opportunities are increasing, reduction of dropouts, and vocational guidance by skilled advisers who are acquainted with the requirements of industry.	Legislative and administrative action by federal and by local educational authorities
3. Greatly expand and improve vocational counseling and training in rural areas, gearing facilities realistically to nonagricultural occupations in which most rural youth must seek employment, and to potential movement to urban areas. Achieve rapid expansion of area vocational schools authorized under the Vocational Education Act of 1963.	Federal, state, and local legislative and administrative action
4. Expand government and nongovernment assistance to improve the quality and scope of education available in the small, predominantly Negro colleges. Conduct special programs to help graduates of smaller Negro colleges qualify for job opportunities available in the health or other growing technical fields.	Resources from all government and all nongovernment sources. Federal and State legislative and administrative action; action by educational authorities and industry
5. Expand and strengthen the Neighborhood Youth Corps Program, including:	Federal legislative action
(a) Providing additional resources;
(b) Reducing the minimum eligibility age from 16 to 14;
(c) Admitting young people between the ages of 22 and 24 to the out-of-school work experience program in order to improve the employability of those with severe unemployment problems.
(d) Facilitating the use of MDTA training to prepare Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates for employment.

Recommendations	Action Needed
6. Experiment with Job Corps Programs in urban settings, realistically geared to the employment and social environment that participants are likely to face upon graduation from the Job Corps.	Federal administrative action
7. Revise the hiring practices of Federal, State, and local governments to permit the probationary employment of juveniles with police records involving only minor crimes.
C. Undertake a massive attack on adult illiteracy.	Federal and state legislative action; action by educational authorities and cooperating community agencies
D. Expand the authority and basic conceptual framework of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission to relate anti-discrimination efforts to a comprehensive manpower development program. This would include giving EEOC authority to refer workers to training programs, to provide funds for manpower development programs, and to take other positive measures.	Federal legislative action
E. Strengthen Recruitment and job development programs for minority groups, including the Federal-State Employment Service System.	Federal and state legislative and administrative action including implementation of recent Task Force report prepared for the Secretary of Labor
1. Federalization of the employment service system.

Recommendations	Action Needed
2. Strengthen the Federal-State employment service system by stronger national standards, better staffing, prevention of discrimination, intensified work with minority groups in rural areas, insuring that State personnel are covered by merit systems, and providing additional funds to improve services for minority group members.
3. Undertake Human Resources Development Programs in major urban areas, taking an individualized approach to the needs of disadvantaged workers. This should include experimental Human Resource Centers in several cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance such as diagnosis of needs, individual counseling, referral to health, welfare, or other services, referral to training, and specialized job development and placement under continuing supervision. (These centers would be somewhat similar to Youth Opportunity Centers but they would deal with adults.)	Federal and State administrative and legislative action
4. Develop strong anti-discrimination practices in the employment services.
F. Increase the effectiveness of the MDTA program, including:	Federal legislative and administrative action
1. Positive efforts to include more minority trainees, by liberalizing the recruitment, testing and selection process;
2. Additional stress on on-the-job training;
3. Reducing paper work and time lags;
4. Maintaining closer contact with employers regarding job requirements and encouraging direct contact between prospective employers and trainees throughout the instruction process:

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Expanding MDTA training in fields other than specific occupations to enhance the employability or trainability of disadvantaged workers; e.g., training in remedial education, communication skills, work habits, attitudes, personal appearance and hygiene, etc.
6. Expanding training to upgrade employed workers by defraying the usual costs incurred by employers in the course of preparing disadvantaged workers for better jobs;
7. Greater flexibility in MDTA training allowances, including:
(a) Increasing allowances to the level of public assistance payments where needed to induce public assistance recipients to accept occupational training;
(b) Reducing the requirement of two years of work experience to one year, thus allowing more youths and adult women to qualify for allowances;
(c) Raising training allowances in training courses of long duration.
G. Amend the MDTA to institute a Federally financed program of vocational guidance and occupational training for inmates of Federal, State, and local penal institutions.	Federal legislative action
H. Expand the MDTA experimental and demonstration program.	Federal legislative and administrative action

Recommendations	Action Needed
1. Develop and test new ways of meeting the employment and training needs of disadvantaged workers.
2. Strengthen and expedite the experimental MDTA program under which former prison inmates are assisted in obtaining surety bonds needed to qualify for employment.
3. Expand the MDTA labor mobility demonstration program which provides financial assurance and supplemental services for unemployed workers who are moving to out-of-area jobs.
I. Develop and implement a large scale program to facilitate the economic and social assimilation of rural Negroes migrating to the city, including:	Federal legislative action, in cooperation with action by State and local government and community agencies
1. Provision of centers in rural surplus labor areas to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for job and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling.
2. Arranging reception facilities in urban labor demand areas, equipped to help the in-migrants to solve employment and housing problems; to make available to them the range of health, welfare, and other urban services; and to provide temporary quarters (Halfway Houses, Youth Hostels) for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period.
3. Provision of relocation allowances under adequate safeguards, to help migrants meet moving and subsistence costs without imposing burdens on the target communities.

Recommendations	Action Needed
V. DEVELOPING A COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM FOR ECONOMIC SECURITY: IMPROVE LABOR STANDARDS AND WELFARE
A. Improve federal minimum wage, protect and improve labor standards, including:	Federal and State legislative action.
1. Expanding coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to currently excluded industries and occupations in which minority groups are heavily concentrated.
2. Increase the minimum wage under the FLSA, permitting adjustments to help workers of very low productivity obtain gainful employment.
3. Extend the protection of the Labor Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries.
4. Extend workmen's compensation to farm workers and other excluded groups.
5. Prohibit child labor on farms outside of school hours.
B. Improve the effectiveness of the unemployment insurance system by:	Federal legislative action.
1. Extending coverage to small employers, farm and agricultural processing workers, employees of non-profit institutions, and other currently excluded groups.
2. Raising the level of benefits to at least 50% of the average weekly wage, with a target of 66 2/3% in future years.
3. Extending the duration of unemployment insurance benefits to a minimum of 26 weeks.
4. Providing additional federal assistance for benefit payments to the long-term unemployed and to help States meet unusually severe unemployment situations.

Recommendations	Action Needed
C. Improve the effectiveness of public assistance programs in providing a minimum income for the poor by:	Federal legislative and administrative action.
1. Eliminating the separate categories of public assistance and substituting a single category based exclusively on need.
2. Establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the States.
3. Under existing programs require that Aid to Families with Dependent Children be granted to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.
4. Reduce or eliminate residence requirements for public assistance or reimburse the States for payments to nonresidents.
5. Adjust public assistance rules to encourage recipients to seek employment:
a. By increasing the amount of earnings which can be retained without reducing the level of benefits;
b. By insuring that recipients who go to work will not endanger their subsequent access to benefits in times of future need;
c. By continuing non-monetary services to recipients who have found jobs, where such services are needed to help with long-range adjustments;

Recommendations	Action Needed
d. By permitting teenagers to keep a substantial proportion of job earnings or MDTA or NYC allowances when assessing the welfare needs of recipient families.
D. Simplify determination of need by:	State administrative action.
1. Accepting certifications of need made by community agencies other than the Public Welfare Agency.
2. Experimenting with the substitution of affidavits from applicants for intensive means test investigations.
3. Simplifying budget procedures by eliminating variations in items used, and consolidating items.
E. Permit operation of public welfare programs by the Federal Government in States which cannot or will not meet Federal standards.	Federal legislative action.
F. Expand non-cash welfare services to solve the basic causes of poverty among needy people:	Federal and State legislative and administrative action.
1. Establish a network of service centers in all areas of need to provide a range of services including consumer education; legal assistance; vocational and personal counseling; training in hygiene, home economics, and citizenship; and related activities.

Recommendations	Action Needed
2. Extend free family planning services and materials on a voluntary basis to both married and unmarried public assistance recipients.
3. Separate the administration of welfare services from the more mechanical extension of cash assistance.
4. Expand rehabilitative services such as: facilities for day care of children occupational training and basic education for welfare recipients, counseling, highly selective and supervised job placement of marginal workers, and work experience programs.
G. Relieve the acute staffing problem in public assistance agencies:	Federal, State, and Local administrative action.
1. Employ non-professional "expediters" to locate, identify, and inform poor people about available programs and to help them utilize services.
2. Develop case work and related activities which can be conducted by supplemental subprofessional personnel and develop large scale programs to recruit and train such aides in order to reduce the burden of the professional staff.
3. Provide resources for a substantial expansion in the number of case workers and for a reduction of clients per case worker.
4. Improve and expand programs to recruit and train professional case workers.
5. Provide higher salaries for case workers, to make them comparable with other skilled and arduous professions.

Recommendations	Action Needed
H. Facilitate availability of federally subsidized programs for disadvantaged people which are secured largely on the basis of local development to all areas of comparable need.	Federal administrative action.
1. Allocate available resources to insure the best geographic coverage, including both rural and urban areas.
2. A greatly expanded technical assistance to communities, both rural and urban, which lack the leadership, experience, or sophistication to develop, process, or conduct projects for their disadvantaged people.

Recommendations	Action needed

VI. PREPARATION OF A COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM TO STRUCTURE THE DEVELOPMENT AND PROVISION OF MANPOWER SERVICES FOR MINORITY GROUPS

Develop a comprehensive structured program to survey and meet the employment, training, and related manpower needs of minority groups. This program should include:	Federal legislative and administrative action.

A. Preparation of a "Human Resources Budget" to systematically:

1. Estimate the number, characteristics, and manpower problems of the specific groups in the nonwhite population who require assistance in meeting their job and training needs. This assessment should not only be national in scope but should focus on the 70-odd cities and five or six Southern States in which Negroes are concentrated. Both urban and rural areas of Negro concentration should be included. Data on unemployment, underemployment, and skill attainment should be collected in predominantly Negro neighborhoods on a block-by-block basis if necessary. The assessment should include estimates of future needs based on population, labor force and socio-economic projections.

2. Identify the types of manpower services needed by each of the specific population groups involved; e.g., by in-school youths, out-of-school jobless youths, workers of low skill and educational attainment, older workers, female workers, etc.

3. Establish specific program goals and a time schedule for meeting the goals. These goals should include the number and types of services to be provided, the specific number and types of minority group people to be served, specific locations, and a definite time schedule.

Recommendations	Action Needed
4. Appraise existing Government and non-Government programs to determine the extent to which they can help meet the established goals, and to assign definite priorities and targets to specific agencies.
5. Identify the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals. This would include determination of the nature, size, timing, and location of the additional programs.
B. Coordinated efforts to develop, propose, and support specific programs and increased resources for which the Human Resources Budget has indicated a need.	Federal administrative and legislative action supported by nongovernment and local government groups
C. A systematic program to evaluate the progress of minority groups in the job market, by area, industry, occupation, and type of worker; and to assess the effectiveness of the Government services involved.	Federal and State administrative and legislative action

File - WHC -

Make note to Pull the "dated"

Stuff about 2 weeks

after W.H.C.

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

April 26, 1966

MEMORANDUM

TO : Members
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

FROM : VIVIAN W. HENDERSON, Chairman Vivian W. Henderson/jmb
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

SUBJECT: April 20 Document on Economic Security and Welfare

Enclosed is the latest version of the task force document on economic security and welfare. The document is sent to you for your exclusive use and is not to be distributed to anyone without the approval of Mr. Edward Sylvester, Vice Chairman, White House Conference Staff.

Please let us have any suggestions you may have on the document as it presently stands.

Enclosure

Preliminary
For Discussion Purposes Only.

TASK FORCE ON ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

Proposed Recommendations

April 20, 1966

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title	Page
INTRODUCTION	1
I. REACH AND SUSTAIN A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY	1
II. DEVELOP A COMPREHENSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE PLAN TO SET GOALS, TO MEASURE PROGRESS, AND TO STRUCTURE THE ACTION UNDERTAKEN "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"	3
III. CREATE MORE AND BETTER JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUPS	6
IV. ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BY BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE EMPLOYERS	15
V. EXPAND TRAINING PROGRAMS AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES TO DEVELOP AND UTILIZE THE EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL OF NEGRO WORKERS	26
VI. DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM TO PREPARE DISADVANTAGED NEGRO YOUTHS FOR PRODUCTIVE JOBS	37
VII. STRENGTHEN INCOME MAINTENANCE AND LABOR STANDARDS PROGRAMS	44
VIII. STRENGTHEN AND RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED WELFARE PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE CONSTRUCTIVE BENEFITS TO THE POOR	50

INTRODUCTION

The employment and income problems of the Negro population, to which the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare addressed itself, are complex, long-standing, and rooted in deep economic, social, psychological, and political disabilities. Bold, creative, and large-scale action is necessary if rapid progress is to be made toward equal opportunity, fair and full employment, decent living standards, full use of human potential, and security for the nation's Negro citizens.

There is no single, simple, or quick solution for the Negro's economic problems. The range of action needed to achieve an adequate level of employment and income security must cover the multi-faceted problems of many different sub-groups. Assistance to jobless Negro youths would not be adequate to meet the needs of underemployed Negro adults. Action to help farm workers would not necessarily improve the lot of people who work in the city. Programs to aid the unemployed mother who depends on public assistance for a livelihood would be of little utility for the Negro professional or businessman. Lasting solutions must be tailored, therefore, to the particular needs of specific components of the Negro population.

Moreover, it must be re-emphasized that the economic problems Negroes face along with other disadvantaged workers are compounded for Negroes by the continuing widespread presence of racial segregation and racial discrimination. Thus, solutions must go beyond strictly economic measures and be related to sociological, political, and psychological approaches.

The Task Force has attempted to consider all of the fundamental factors underlying the Negro's economic disadvantages. A wide-ranging battery of specific and realistic actions is proposed, calculated to achieve sharp progress on a variety of fronts--jobs, training, non-discrimination, supportive services, labor standards, income maintenance, public assistance, and others. Moreover, the recommended action involves not merely one, but all sectors of the American community--the federal as well as state and local governments; business enterprises as well as organized labor; educational bodies; community organizations such as churches, and health and welfare groups; and the spectrum of national associations. The intention is to mobilize the nation's brainpower and material resources for a systematic and many-sided effort to eliminate the artificial barriers that prevent the Negro's full participation in the economic and social process.

The Social and Economic Setting

Recommendations to improve the economic security and welfare of the Negro people must take into account the large magnitude of the Negro's disadvantages in the job market, the wide gap between the income and employment status of whites and nonwhites, and the changing characteristics and geographic distribution of the Negro population and labor force. They must take into account sharp and decisive advances in technology and other such forces which generate abundant benefits to some and disproportionate burdens to others.

Today there are more than 20 million Negro Americans. They comprise more than one-tenth of the nation's total population.

There are some 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force; i.e., employed or looking for jobs. They include about 3.5 million women. By 1970, the total is expected to reach ten million.

The figure of 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force presents an incomplete picture. Many members of the working age population are not in the labor force but could be if jobs and incentives in the form of decent earnings were consistently available to them. Thus, eight percent of all Negro men aged 25 to 64 were not in the labor force in 1963, compared with only five percent of comparable whites. On the other hand, the proportion of Negro women who work or seek jobs is considerably higher than the proportion for whites, since more of the former are primary family wage earners or must supplement the wages of their husbands.

Today, the Negro population is predominantly an urban one. About three-fourths of all Negroes live in urban areas, mainly in larger cities with populations of more than 50,000. The six cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington, D. C., and Los Angeles alone account for one-fifth of all Negro people. There are 18 cities in which 100,000 or more Negroes live--these cities account for almost one-third of the total Negro population. The concentration of Negroes in largely segregated areas of central cities, while white residents, industrial establishments, and offices move toward the suburbs, constitutes an important factor in framing proposals to improve economic and welfare conditions.

The heavy out-movement of Negroes from the South in search of better economic, educational, social, and political status (3.3 million left the South between 1940 and 1965) is an important factor in planning action programs. However, over one-half of all Negroes still live in the Southern States, and there are recent indications that the rate of out-migration is decreasing.

Most of the Negroes who still live in rural areas are in the South. Even in that region, however, almost three-fifth of all Negro people are urban residents. In 1960, two out of every five residents of Birmingham, Atlanta, and New Orleans were Negroes.

While urban problems must command an increasing proportion of our attention, we cannot overlook two facts. First, many of the hard-core economic security and welfare problems Negroes face are in rural areas. Second, those rural migrants who find their way into the stream of urban life bring with them problems which impede significantly their ability to adjust to present and future urban labor markets.

The Negro's disadvantaged status in the job market is underscored by government statistics on unemployment and underemployment. Even in today's booming economy (Feb. 1966), the unemployment rate for Negroes is about 8 percent--more than twice the national average--and the gap between whites and nonwhites is even greater for married people and heads of households (particularly women) who are most in need of a job to support their families. Negroes only comprise eleven percent of the nation's labor force, but make up more than twenty percent of the nation's unemployed.

Not only is unemployment higher among Negroes, but they tend to be out-of-work for longer periods than whites. They also suffer heavily from underemployment, including part-time work, substandard pay, and the necessity to accept jobs below their skill or educational potentials.

The most serious unemployment problem is the shocking incidence of joblessness among Negro youths. Although this problem has been decreasing in recent months, fully 18 percent of out-of-school Negro youths aged 16 to 21 were unemployed in February 1966. This is twice the rate for white youths and it means that thousands of young Negro ~~men~~ people who are actively looking for jobs cannot find a productive place in our society. In addition, it is estimated thay many thousands of youths have withdrawn from the labor force, or refrained from entering it, because they have given up hope of finding decent employment.

The school "drop-out" problem among young people is another factor compounding the situation. Some three-fifths of out-of-school nonwhite youths aged 16 to 21 lack high school diplomas. In this era of technological advance and complex job requirements, "drop-outs" have twice the unemployment rates of high school graduates. When they are employed, they work for less pay and are more subject to layoffs and displacement by machines.

The Negro's disadvantages do not end when he finds a job. Even when he is employed, he tends to work in low-skill, low-wage occupations and industries with the lowest growth rates and the most limited opportunities for advancement and mobility.

In recent years, technological change and other job market conditions have led to a rising demand for skilled craftsmen, white collar workers, and service workers, while reducing opportunities for unskilled and semi-skilled laborers. In particular, the technical, professional, clerical, sales, and related white collar occupations have shown rapid growth. Yet, it is precisely in the skilled and white collar occupations that the Negroes are heavily under-represented, while they are concentrated in the unskilled and semi-skilled labor categories in which job opportunities are most restricted.

Only one-fifth of all nonwhite workers hold white collar jobs, compared with almost one-half of all white workers. Only seven percent of all Negro workers are in the professional and technical category--half the proportion among whites. Only three percent of the nonwhites are managers, officials, or proprietors, compared with eleven percent of the whites. The figures for clerical workers are nine percent versus seventeen percent; for sales workers, two percent versus seven percent; for skilled craftsmen, seven percent versus thirteen percent.

By contrast, twelve percent of all Negro workers are nonfarm laborers--three times the proportion of whites. And nonwhites are heavily represented among migratory and other seasonal farm workers and small tenant farmers who face severe underemployment, substandard earnings, and eventual replacement by new agricultural technology on large farms.

Negroes are heavily concentrated in the service occupations, which have shown rising manpower needs. However, they tend to be employed at household service, custodial, and other low-paid work rather than in the higher-paid service occupations.

To keep abreast of new technological demands and changes in occupational requirements, a fundamental alteration in the occupational structure of the Negro labor force is necessary. ~~If~~ Otherwise severe problems of economic insecurity ~~and welfare~~ are ~~to be effectively reduced~~ likely to continue.

A major problem in improving the occupational status of the Negro labor force is its relatively low average educational attainment. In 1962, for example, less than one-third of the nonwhite members of the labor force had completed high school, compared with a majority of the whites. Educational attainment has, however, shown continuous improvement in successive generations. This fact represents an important element in plans to improve the Negro's lot.

On the other hand, achievements in occupational status and earnings by Negro workers have not kept pace with improvements in their educational attainment. The average Negro male with 16 or more years of school earns an annual income less than that earned by a white male with ten years of school.

Employment handicaps are reflected in the relatively low incomes of most Negroes. The income of the average Negro family is little more than half of the white family income. It is true that the Negro income level is rising, with greatest progress in Northern and Western urban areas. However, the rapid rise of incomes among whites has prevented a narrowing of the income gap between the races. Even when whites and Negroes are employed in the same occupation, and have had the same number of years of schooling, the average incomes of the two groups show this disparity.

Because of unemployment and low incomes, a much higher proportion of Negroes than of whites must rely on public assistance to supplement inadequate earnings. These poor people need not only money for subsistence, but a wide range of services to qualify them for productive employment, and to meet basic family, health, and welfare problems.

Poverty goes hand-in-hand with cultural deprivation, alienation from the mainstream values of American society, and unstable family relationships. The social and psychological consequences of discrimination and ghetto life are woven into the economic problems of the Negro and require consideration in economic security and welfare programs. For this reason, there is mounting awareness that conventional programs to solve the employment needs of minority groups must be accompanied by a wide range of supportive services designed to instill favorable work attitudes and character and personality traits, fill gaps in basic education, solve health and family problems, and overcome other barriers to the individual's labor force adjustments.

What Must Be Done

Taking into account the complexity and inter-relationships of the underlying factors, the Task Force has attempted to develop meaningful, action-oriented recommendations. The first recommendation made is a basic one which influences the rapidity and degree of success with which the other recommendations can be implemented. This basic recommendation is for the attainment and maintenance of a full employment economy.

The second recommendation is for the development of a Comprehensive Human Resource Plan. This Plan is intended to set goals, measure progress, and structure the action needed to attack the economic security and welfare problems of the Negro. It will pull together scattered approaches, insure full consideration of all relevant factors, and coordinate necessary programs in a systematic manner.

The next two recommendations include the creation of more and better job opportunities and the elimination of discrimination in employment. Stress is placed on action by both private and government employers. In particular, employment in state and local governments, which has risen rapidly from 5.4 million in 1957 to almost eight million in 1965, offers great potential opportunities for Negro job seekers. Public employment is growing in all regions, with the fastest growth in the South, pointing to the need for positive efforts to recruit and train Negroes in both local and state agencies.

A fifth recommendation is the expansion of training programs and supportive services, to provide Negroes with the skills, educational attainment, and other characteristics needed to qualify and successfully compete for the increasingly complex jobs of today's economy. Training for jobs in both government and private industry is considered.

Because of the severity of the unemployment problem among Negro youth and its effects on juvenile delinquency and other symptoms of social and economic deprivation, a sixth section of urgent recommendations for youth programs is presented. It is followed by a seventh set of recommendations on ways to strengthen income maintenance and labor standards programs, which currently do not provide adequate protection for some important occupations and industries in which Negroes tend to be employed.

Finally, a series of recommendations are made to strengthen and restructure public assistance and related welfare programs. These recommendations take into account the needs of Negro and other disadvantaged people who, because of age, family status, physical handicaps, or other reasons cannot benefit directly from measures to help them adjust to the job market, but who require financial assistance and constructive rehabilitation or other services.

I. REACH AND SUSTAIN A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY

Why the recommendation is needed.

Measures to improve the economic security and welfare of minority groups take effect most rapidly in a healthy, growing, full employment economy. The availability of jobs at fair wages to all who need them eases the task of eliminating discrimination, upgrading the nonwhite work force, raising labor standards, and providing income security. Consequently, the attainment and maintenance of a full employment economy is a recommendation of high priority.

Closely related to this basic goal is the desirability of developing preventive programs to help minority group and other workers retain their gains in the face of continous technological change, changes in the demand for civilian or defense products, shifts in the location of job opportunities, and other adjustments in manpower requirements. Such forward-looking action to avoid layoffs and other dislocations in the job market sharply reduces the dimensions of economic security problems.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Utilize fiscal, monetary, and manpower policies, public works programs, and other measures to sustain a full employment economy.

2. Develop preventive manpower programs designed to help adjust workers, industries, and areas in advance of major changes in manpower requirements. For example, manpower training programs should be established to retrain workers while they are still employed, in cases where their jobs are expected to be eliminated by technical change or cutbacks in production in the near future.

II. DEVELOP A COMPREHENSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE PLAN TO SET GOALS, TO MEASURE PROGRESS, AND TO STRUCTURE THE ACTION UNDERTAKEN "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Why the recommendation is needed.

The emphasis of the White House Conference is on action. Effective action programs must be based on accurate information about the economic status and problems of nonwhites. The programs must also be based on systematic planning, which mobilizes all available resources, selects specific goals, and schedules all necessary activities in accordance with definite timetables and priorities. Moreover, the component parts of the overall program must be efficiently coordinated to attain a maximum impact. The recommendation for a Comprehensive Human Resource Plan is intended to provide a flexible basis for such a creative, hard-hitting, action program.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop and conduct an effective program for collecting and analyzing information on the number, characteristics, employment, unemployment, and job opportunities of Negro workers. This program should focus most heavily on the 70-odd cities in which most urban Negroes are concentrated and on the 5 or 6 Southern States in which most rural Negroes live. Data should be obtained for both urban and rural areas, and on a neighborhood basis.
2. Develop and keep up-to-date a Human Resource Budget:
   a. Identifying the number, types, and problems of nonwhite youths, unskilled workers, older workers, women, and other specific groups in need of intensive manpower services;

b. Establishing specific goals and timetables for providing these services;

c. Determining the extent to which existing government and nongovernment programs can help meet the goals;

d. Indicating the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals;

e. Assigning definite priorities and targets for action by specific agencies.

3. Systematically evaluate the progress of minority groups in the job market and the effectiveness of government and nongovernment services in meeting their needs.

III. CREATE MORE AND BETTER JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUPS

Why the recommendation is needed.

The availability of decent job opportunities at fair wages is essential to the economic and social progress of the Negro. The high rate of unemployment and underemployment among Negroes; their concentration in low-paying jobs at the bottom of the skill ladder; their vulnerability to displacement by automation--all are factors at the very heart of their insecurity, poverty, and waste of human resources.

This section of recommendations approaches job creation and expansion of employment opportunities through improvements in economic measures and manpower utilization. Action to eliminate discrimination in employment is covered in the following section. The job creation recommendations call for affirmative action by both private and government employers, labor organizations, and community groups. The recommendations are tailored to the special needs of various subgroups in the Negro labor force, ranging from unskilled workers who need special help in adjusting to the demands of the job market to skilled Negro professionals and business people. They take account of the needs of workers in both urban and rural areas, and include measures not only to aid jobless workers, but to upgrade employed workers into more skilled, higher-paying occupations.

Subrecommendation A

Make positive efforts to improve job opportunities for Negroes.

Action Required:

By Employers and Labor Unions

1. Positive recruitment of minority group workers.
2. Review the work potential of nonwhite staff members to insure full use of their potential and to encourage upgrading to more skilled and managerial jobs.
3. Review official job descriptions to eliminate excess educational, skill, and test score requirements.
4. "Re-engineer" job duties to provide employment opportunities for low-skill workers where this will not impair the employment status of other workers.
5. Locate new business establishments and government offices in areas accessible to Negro workers. For example, many establishments being located in suburban areas and industrial parks to which commuting from Negro residential areas is difficult and expensive could have been located in more convenient inner-city areas.
6. Increase job opportunities for nonwhites in the skilled crafts by:
   a. Actively recruiting Negroes into craft unions;

b. Helping Negro youths to qualify for apprenticeship programs by establishing pre-apprenticeship training and by revising selection criteria to eliminate unnecessary barriers.

Subrecommendation B

Develop and aggressively administer programs to improve job opportunities for Negroes in rural-farm areas.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop an experimental program to give Negro farm operators the means and incentives to gain ownership of, and successfully operate, farms through a combination of loans, grants, training, counseling, and technical assistance.
2. Expand community development programs to create new non-farm job opportunities in rural areas without creating unemployment elsewhere, and expedite tests of the economic development district approach (delineating districts around central cities with development potential, and emphasizing the development of job opportunities in these central cities as a means of providing additional employment and other economic benefits for both the rural and urban residents of the district) authorized under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.
3. Develop and establish a federally subsidized program to provide off-season or part-time work opportunities to supplement the incomes of underemployed farm people.
4. Experiment with new ways to provide year round employment for migratory and other seasonal farm workers and to build a skilled and stable farm work force.

By State and Local Governments

1. Utilize federal financial incentives to plan and conduct effective community development programs to improve community facilities and human resources and to expand job opportunities.

Subrecommendation C

Establish a federally financed work program to provide constructive and socially useful employment and on-the-job training for jobless and underemployed workers.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop, supervise, and provide resources for an employment program for jobless and underemployed workers.
2. Provide work assignments on government activities for some enrollees.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

Furnish federally subsidized work-training opportunities on socially useful projects which would not have been otherwise performed.

Subrecommendation D

Encourage ownership of business enterprises by Negroes.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Increase the availability of federal loans, grants, and technical assistance under such legislation as Title IV of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.

By Business

1. Extend credit and franchises to nonwhites.
2. Encourage joint ventures by white and nonwhite businessmen.

Subrecommendation E

Improve the access of nonwhite workers to all available jobs in the community.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Encourage and finance studies of local transportation and employment patterns.
2. Support the construction of roads and other transportation facilities to help bring together workers and available jobs.
3. Locate federal offices and other establishments in places easily accessible to residential areas in which nonwhites live.

By Local and State Governments

1. Evaluate and modify local transportation routes, fares, and facilities to improve the access of minority groups to available jobs.

IV. ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BY BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE EMPLOYERS

Why the recommendation is needed.

Racial discrimination in employment has had a long and shameful history in our country. From the nation's point of view, it has barred the Negro from making his maximum contribution to the productive life of our society. From the viewpoint of the individual Negro, it has served as a barrier to the full use of his human potentials-- often relegating him to low-paid, low-skill jobs offering the lowest levels of economic security and occupational dignity.

Recent years have seen the development of new legal tools to combat discrimination. These tools need strengthening and effective and rapid implementation.

The recommendations in this section provide for effective use of federal government powers to end discriminatory practices. At the same time, the roles of private employers, labor organizations, state and local governments, and community groups are stressed. The recommendations constitute a community-wide effort to make equal employment opportunities a reality.

Subrecommendation A

Greatly strengthen efforts by employers and labor unions to eliminate discrimination in hiring, assigning, and upgrading employees.

Action Required:

By Government Employers

1. Eliminate discrimination in Federal, State, local governments. The federal government should become a model employer.

By Nongovernment Employers

1. Issue and enforce anti-discrimination policies, and improve company records on the hiring and employment of Negro personnel.
2. Employ more nonwhites in personnel and supervisory positions responsible for hiring and evaluating employees.
3. Withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination.

By Labor Unions

1. Establish and maintain non-discriminatory membership policies.
2. Enforce non-discrimination clauses in collective bargaining contracts covering hiring, tenure, terms and conditions of employment, work assignments, and advancement.

By Community Organizations such as Churches, Educational, and Health and Welfare Groups and Associations

1. Provision of technical assistance by national organizations to persuade and help local affiliates drop discriminatory practices.
2. Withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination; e.g., "Project Equality" of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice.

Subrecommendation B

Enact and improve State and local Fair Employment Practice laws and programs.

Action Required:

By State and Local Governments

1. Enact F.E.P. laws in States and cities that do not yet have such programs.
2. Southern States should give special emphasis to enacting and implementing F.E.P. programs. Some progress in implementing F.E.P. programs has already been made in Kentucky, North Carolina, and Tennessee.

Subrecommendation C

Strengthen Title VII (Prohibition of Discrimination by Employers, Unions, and Employment Agencies) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Amend Title VII to:

   a. Expand coverage to employees of state and local governments, private membership clubs, educational institutions, and employers and unions with eight or more employees or members.

   b. Authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue "cease and desist" orders.

   c. Aurhorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to order monetary awards to persons suffering financial loss through denial of equal employment opportunity.

2. Strengthen administration of Title VII by:

   a. A more adequate budget and staff.

   b. Establishing federal guidelines for tests used to evaluate current and prospective employees and developing performance criteria and other enforcement aids.

   c. Mandatory review of promotion programs and seniority systems.

d. Affirmative action to change discrimination patterns through educational programs, informal conferences with employers and union officials, closer liaison with civil rights organizations, and remedial action in conciliation agreements.

e. Increase use of complaints initiated by Commissioners to alter basic patterns of discrimination.

f. Develop more effective cooperation between federal, state, and local fair employment agencies.

Subrecommendation D

Eliminate discrimination in State or local programs financed by federal funds.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Intensify enforcement efforts under Title VI (Prohibition of Discrimination in State or Local Programs Financed by Federal Funds) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including:
   a. Expanding staff and budget resources.
   b. Developing performance criteria and other enforcement aids
   c. Expanding the training of state and local staffs.
2. Insure minority group representation on state and local advisory, planning, and action committees in federally subsidized programs: e.g., agricultural programs, vocational education, training programs under the Manpower Development and Training Act, community development programs under the Public Works and Economic Development Act, activities under the Economic Opportunity Act, and housing and urban renewal programs.

By State and Local Governments

1. Cooperate with the federal government in measures to effectuate Title VI.

Subrecommendation E

Prevent discrimination in employment on government contract work.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Strengthen the administration of Executive Order 11246 (Nondiscrimination on Government Contracts) by:

   a. Compliance reviews prior to the award of contracts.

   b. Requiring employers to demonstrate affirmative action to insure equal employment opportunity.

   c. Increasing compliance budget and staff in federal agencies with compliance responsibilities.

   d. Establishing specific performance criteria for objective measurement of compliance.

By State and Local Governments

1. Develop and enforce rules for nondiscrimination on government contract work.

Subrecommendation 8

Undertake technical assistance and educational programs to help employers, unions, and others develop capabilities for providing equal employment opportunities and to reduce employment prejudice and discrimination.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish and finance an appropriate office with responsibility for developing and coordinating a large scale educational program to combat misinformation, prejudice, and discrimination among employers, labor union officials, educators, counselors, personnel managers and others responsible for teaching, selecting, and evaluating employees.
2. Expand programs to provide realistic guidance to employers and unions facing problems in complying with nondiscrimination policies.
3. Provide an effective means for employers and unions to exhange information on their experience in attacking discriminatory practices.
4. Arrange a White House Conference of industry and union representatives, to stimulate their acceptance of reasonable responsibilities for eliminating job discrimination.

By State and Local Governments

1. Encourage the establishment of State and Local Equal Opportunity Councils and the convening of conferences to give leadership to anti-discrimination efforts.
2. Insure the teaching of constructive racial attitudes in school systems.

By Community Organizations

1. Develop and conduct educational programs for such groups as churches, women's organizations, and local business and professional organizations.

V. EXPAND TRAINING PROGRAMS AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES TO DEVELOP AND UTILIZE THE EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL OF NEGRO WORKERS

Why the recommendation is needed.

Discrimination, high rates of unemployment and underemployment, relegation to low-skill jobs, and poverty have left their mark on the Negro labor force. A relatively high proportion of Negro workers lack the educational attainment and occupational skills needed to meet the increasingly complex job requirements of today's economy. The problem is made more severe by the migration of hundreds of thousands of nonwhites from rural to urban areas, often without the kinds of vocational skills demanded for nonfarm work, and often lacking adequate knowledge of city life and services.

There is a crucial need to make available occupational training and related basic and remedial education to help prepare jobless Negroes for employment. There is also a need for training to upgrade employed Negroes who are working below their skill potentials. In many cases, existing training or educational programs are of inadequate size, inconveniently located, and not geared to the needs of disadvantaged groups. On-the-job training by employers has also been relatively limited for nonwhites.

Formal training is not enough to assist Negroes at the lower end of the economic scale, where poverty is often accompanied by cultural deprivation and social disorganization. People in this group require a variety of supportive services to ease their adjustment to the demands of the job market. They need specialized help in solving health, family, housing, and welfare problems which interfere with their success at seeking and holding jobs. Those who migrate from the countryside to the city often need help in adjusting to their new environment. Many disadvantaged people require counseling and related services to develop effective work, job-seeking, and human relations attitudes and behavior patterns. New institutions to rehabilitate persons with especially severe adjustment problems must be developed.

This set of recommendations covers training programs and supportive services to meet these urgent needs. It includes steps to strengthen government services, as well as measures to utilize the facilities and experience of nongovernment organizations.

Subrecommendation A

Develop and implement training and upgrading programs directed especially at disadvantaged workers.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Provide additional tax credits to stimulate employers to undertake or expand education and training programs without reducing their previous training efforts.
2. Use government contracting authority to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with work on government contracts.

By Business and Labor

1. Introduce programs to encourage the reinvestment of gains from rising productivity into training and upgrading programs.

Subrecommendation B

Undertake a massive attack on illiteracy and other basic educational deficiencies among adults.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand resources available for local adult basic education programs and experiment with new ways of motivating and teaching adults with low educational attainment.

By Educational Authorities and Community Organizations

1. Expand basic education programs and gear teaching methods and the location of classes to the needs and characteristics of disadvantaged people.

Subrecommendation C

Strengthen services to minority groups by public Employment Service agencies.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Federalize the employment service system.
2. Develop strong anti-discrimination practices in the Employment Service.
3. Strengthen the Federal-State employment service system by stronger national standards, better staffing, intensifying work with minority groups in rural areas, insuring that state personnel are covered by merit systems, and providing additional funds to improve services for minority group members.
4. Undertake Human Resources Development Programs in major urban areas, taking an individualized approach to the needs of disadvantaged workers. This should include establishment of Human Resource Centers in several cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance such as diagnosis of needs, individual counseling, referral to health, welfare, or other services, referral to training, and specialized job development and placement under continuing supervision.

By State Governments

1. Cooperate in a positive manner with federal government efforts to improve Employment Service operations.
2. Eradicate discriminatory practices in selection and referral of job applicants.

Subrecommendation D

Expand and increase the effectiveness of the federally financed program for training unemployed and underemployed workers under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Make positive efforts to include more minority trainees by liberalizing the recruitment, testing, and selection process.
2. Place greater stress on on-the-job training, and maintain closer contact with employers regarding job requirements and placement of trainees.
3. Reduce time lags and paper work in establishing training projects.
4. Expand MDTA training in nonoccupational subjects needed to improve the employability or trainability of disadvantaged workers; e.g., remedial education, communication skills, work habits, attitudes, personal appearance and hygiene, etc.
5. Expand training to upgrade employed Negro workers by defraying unusual costs incurred by employers in the course of preparing severely disadvantaged workers for better jobs.
6. Allow greater flexibility in MDTA training allowances, including:
   a. Increasing allowance to the level of public assistance payments where needed to induce public assistance recipients to accept occupational training.

b. Reducing the eligibility requirement of two years of work experience to one year, thus allowing more youths and adult women to qualify for allowances.

c. Raising training allowances in courses of long duration.

7. Amend the MDTA to establish an extensive program of vocational guidance and occupational training for inmates of Federal, State and local penal institutions.

8. Expand and expedite experimental and demonstration programs, including programs to help former prison inmates obtain surety bonds needed to qualify for employment and the provision of financial assistance and supplemental services to unemployed workers who are moving to out-of-area jobs.

By State Governments

1. Stress positive efforts to include minority group trainees in training programs and to develop programs geared to their special needs.

By Business and Labor

1. Cooperate in establishing MDTA on-the-job training programs to help minority group workers find employment or advance to more skilled jobs.

Subrecommendation E

Develop and implement a large scale program to facilitate the economic and social adjustment of rural Negroes migrating to the city.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop and provide resources for a program to assist rural Negroes migrating to the city including:
   a. Centers in rural surplus labor areas to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for jobs and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling.
   b. Reception facilities in urban labor demand areas equipped to help the in-migrants solve employment and housing problems; to make available to them the range of health, welfare, and other urban services; and to provide temporary quarters (Halfway Houses, Youth Hostels) for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period.
   c. Relocation allowances under adequate safeguards to help migrants meet moving and subsistence costs, without imposing burdens on the target communities.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Support the adoption and implementation of a large scale program to help disadvantaged people migrating to the city from rural areas.

2. Provide centers and reception facilities in rural and urban areas, under federal subsidies, standards, and coordination.

VI. DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM TO PREPARE DISADVANTAGED NEGRO YOUTHS FOR PRODUCTIVE JOBS

Why the recommendation is needed.

The shocking high rate of unemployment among Negro youths--both male and female--their unduly high rate of school drop-outs, and disturbing evidence of social disorganization among some young residents of the impoverished Negro ghetto are problems of such magnitude and urgency that a separate section of recommendations has been devoted to them.

The recommendations in this section are directed at the fundamental problems and needs of youth, rather than the elimination of superficial symptoms. Such needs include greatly strengthened vocational education facilities, expansion of counseling services, and more and better government work experience and training activities. Creative experimentation is needed to develop and test new ways to help young people with especially severe labor force handicaps. At the same time, the need to improve opportunities for youths with potential for advancement into higher professional and technical occupations is also given consideration.

Subrecommendation A

Greatly expand and strengthen high school vocational education programs.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand resources for grants to improve vocational education in the states.
2. Strengthen standards for the content and quality of vocational education subsidized by federal funds.

By State and Local Governments

1. Revise vocational education programs to emphasize training in new or growing occupations, to utilize the latest equipment, and to narrow the gap between the school and work place.
2. Expand and improve vocational training in rural areas, gearing it realistically to non-agricultural occupations in which most rural youth must seek employment, and to potential movement to urban areas.
3. Expedite the establishment of area vocational schools authorized under the Vocational Education Act of 1963.

Subrecommendation B

Greatly expand and strengthen counseling services for in-school youths, making available skilled vocational advisors who are acquainted with the requirements of industry, motivating nonwhite youths toward jobs in which opportunities are increasing, and reducing dropouts.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Provide resources to assist educational and Employment Service authorities to sharply expand and improve counseling services. A target of at least one full-time counselor for every 100 youths in schools in poverty areas should be set.
2. Finance more adequately and strengthen programs to train more and better counselors, with emphasis on training in dealing with the problems of youth in minority groups.

By State and Local Governments

1. Expand and improve counseling services in schools and public employment offices.

By Community Organizations

1. Supplement the counseling services of government, with emphasis on the needs of disadvantaged youths with especially severe employment and training problems.

Subrecommendation C

Expand opportunities for Negroes to prepare for professional and technical jobs.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand assistance to improve the education available in small, predominantly Negro colleges.
2. Develop and conduct special programs to help graduates of smaller, predominantly Negro colleges qualify for job opportunities available in the health, education, scientific, or other growing fields.
3. Strengthen programs of financial assistance to needy students.

By State and Local Governments

1. Develop and conduct programs to improve the educational potential of predominantly Negro colleges and to assist disadvantaged Negro students.

By Business, Labor, and Community Organizations

1. Provide financial assistance to predominantly Negro colleges and scholarships to qualified needy students.
2. Actively recruit nonwhite youths into management or technical training programs.

Subrecommendation D

Expand and strengthen the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Extend and improve NYC services by legislative action to provide additional resources, reduce the minimum eligibility age from 16 to 14, increase the maximum age from 22 to 24, and facilitate the use of MDTA training to prepare Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates from employment.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Utilize federal financial assistance to provide more and better work opportunities and supportive services for Neighborhood Youth Corps enrollees.

Subrecommendation E

Intensify experimentation to develop new ways of meeting the employment and training needs of minority youths.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand experimental and demonstration programs currently authorized under the Manpower Development and Training Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, the Vocational Education Act, and other laws.
2. Experiment with programs geared to the special needs of jobless Negro girls and young women, with residential training and work-experience programs in urban settings for problem youths, and with employment of juveniles who have police records.

By State and Local Government and Community Organizations

1. Propose and participate in experimental programs.
2. Furnish probationary employment to juveniles with police records involving only minor crimes.

By Business and Labor

1. Participate more directly in proposing and operating experimental programs for youths, adding to experience already gained by industry in operating Job Corps centers.

VII. STRENGTHEN INCOME MAINTENANCE AND LABOR STANDARDS PROGRAMS

Why the recommendation is needed.

The strengthening of income maintenance and labor standards programs is of special importance for Negroes, who are heavily concentrated in occupations and industries which pay low wages, provide only intermittent employment, and are excluded from protective labor standards legislation. For example, extension of minimum wage laws, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, and laws protecting the right to join labor unions to currently excluded agricultural and service workers would greatly contribute to the economic security of large numbers of Negro workers. Such protection would help to raise incomes to adequate levels and would reduce the dependence of impoverished nonwhites on public assistance. Improved labor standards and income safeguards would also help to provide the Negro work force with the dignity, self-respect, and security needed to motivate workers to develop their skills, actively seek employment, and make their maximum contribution in the job market.

Subrecommendation A

Improve federal minimum wage and child labor standards.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to currently excluded industries and occupations in which minority groups are heavily concentrated: e.g., service and agricultural jobs.
2. Increase the minimum wage, permitting adjustments to help workers of very low productivity obtain gainful employment.
3. Prohibit child labor outside of school hours on farms except those operated by the child's own family.

Subrecommendation B

Extend the protection and benefits of collective bargaining to occupations and industries in which nonwhites are concentrated.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Extend the protection of the Labor-Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries: e.g., agriculture.

By State Government

1. Insure, through State laws and programs, protection of collective bargaining rights for workers excluded from the Labor-Management Relations Act.

By Labor Organizations

1. Intensify efforts to organize workers in service, agricultural, and other occupations in which nonwhites are heavily concentrated.

Subrecommendation C

Improve the effectiveness of the unemployment insurance system.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Extend coverage to small employers, farm workers, agricultural processing workers, employees of non-profit institutions, and other currently excluded groups.
2. Raise the level of benefits to at least 50% of the average weekly wage, with a target of 66 2/3% in future years.
3. Extend the duration of unemployment insurance benefits to a minimum of 26 weeks.
4. Provide additional federal assistance for benefit payments to the long-term unemployed and to help States meet unusually severe unemployment situations.

Subrecommendation D

Extend Workmen's Compensation to farm workers and other excluded groups.

Action Required:

By State Governments

1. Enact legislation to strengthen Workmen's Compensation programs.

VIII. STRENGTHEN AND RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED WELFARE PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE CONSTRUCTIVE BENEFITS TO THE POOR

Why the recommendation is needed.

Welfare programs as they are presently operated fall far short of providing an adequate living to the poor. The annual income available to families under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program only averages about $1.15 per day per person for all of the costs of living. Aged and disabled recipients of public assistance receive only between $900 and $1000 a year and blind recipients receive slightly over $1100 a year.

In addition to low cash payments, the provision of services to help poor people overcome the barriers to self-sufficiency is also limited in most cases. Widespread shortages of trained staff members add to this problem.

Both Federal and State laws impose eligibility conditions that deny help to some needy people. The most important group excluded from coverage under Federal law are families with children in which the parent or parents are employed but whose earnings do not provide even a meager living. More than half of the children among the poor are thus excluded from eligibility for Federally-aided public assistance. Also excluded are persons nearly but not yet 65 and young and middle-aged couples or individuals who are not blind or disabled and who have no minor children. Requirements for a specified length of residence and special requirements that exclude some families with children that are headed by women also result in many needy persons not receiving aid.

The limitations of existing programs bear particularly heavily on Negroes. More heads of households in the non-white than the white population work part-time or for only part of the year. Negro earnings tend to be lower. The proportion of non-white families headed by women is almost two and one-half times the corresponding proportion of white families. The risk of poverty among children in non-white families headed by employed women is about two and one-half times that of white children in such familes. Finally, the southern States have conspicuous difficulty in financing adequate assistance programs, even with a relatively high tax effort for public services. Since half of the total non-white poor and only about one-half of the white poor live in the south, this situation adversely affects Negro families.

The recommendations in this section seek to assure assistance to all needy persons, to assure reasonable payments, and to provide adequate staff and nonmonetary services. In addition, some thought has been given to more basic approaches to the poverty problem, beyond the limits of conventional public assistance programs.

Subrecommendation A

Raise the level of public assistance benefits to furnish a standard of living compatable with health and decency.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the States.

Subrecommendation B

Insure the availability of public assistance to all impoverished people.

Action Required

By Federal Government

1. Eliminate the separate categories of public assistance and substitute a single category based exclusively on need.
2. Under existing programs, require that Aid to Families with Dependent Children be granted to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.
3. Reduce or eliminate residence requirements for public assistance or reimburse the States for payments to nonresidents.

Subrecommendation C

Strengthen the administration of welfare programs.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Enact legislation to permit operation of public welfare programs by the Federal Government in states which cannot or will not meet federal standards.
2. Greatly expand technical assistance to both rural and urban communities and improve the geographic distribution of funds to insure that all areas of comparable need have access to federally subsidized programs for disadvantaged people which are secured largely on the basis of local development: e.g., community action projects under the Economic Opportunity Act and community development projects under the Public Works and Economic Development Act.

By State and Local Governments

1. Simplify the process through which need for assistance is determined for public assistance applicants.

Subrecommendation D

Adjust public assistance rules to encourage recipients to take jobs or training.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish rules and standards for State public assistance agencies to encourage public assistance recipients to seek employment. (These rules should guide State agencies to take action such as listed below.)

By State and Local Governments

1. Increase the amount of job earnings which can be retained by public assistance recipients without reducing the level of benefits.
2. Insure that recipients who go to work will not endanger their subsequent access to benefits in times of future need.
3. Continue non-monetary services to recipients who have found jobs, where such services are needed to help with long-range adjustments.
4. Permit teenagers to keep a substantial proportion of job earnings or MDTA or NYC allowances when assessing the welfare needs of recipient families.

Subrecommendation E

Expand non-monetary welfare services to alleviate the basic causes of poverty.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish standards and provide additional resources for State and local governments and community organizations to provide supplemental non-monetary services to needy people, including the services listed below.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Establish a network of service centers in all areas of need to provide a range of services including consumer education; legal assistance; vocational and personal counseling; training in hygiene, home economics, and citizenship; and related activities.
2. Extend free family planning services and materials on a voluntary basis to both married and unmarried public assistance recipients.
3. Expand rehabilitative services such as: facilities for day care of children, occupational training and basic education for welfare recipients, counseling, highly selective and supervised job placement of marginal workers, and work experience programs.

Subrecommendation F

Relieve the acute staffing problem in public assistance agencies.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Stimulate and provide resources for a greatly expanded program of recruitment and training for professional case workers, aimed at a sharp reduction of the number of clients served by each worker. A target of no more than 60 clients per professional case worker should be set.
2. Provide resources for the payment of higher salaries to case workers, to make them comparable with other skilled and arduous professions.
3. Analyze case work and related activities to determine which supplemental work can be assisgned to subprofessionals.
4. Develop and provide resources for large scale programs to recruit and train subprofessional aides in order to reduce the burden of the professional staff.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Revise salary schedules for professional case workers.
2. Undertake a substantial reduction in the number of clients assigned to each case worker.
3. Employ nonprofessional staff members to handle the more routine tasks and as "expediters" to locate and inform poor people about available programs and to help them utilize services.

Subrecommendation G

Explore new approaches to assure a minimum level of income.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Explore means of guaranteeing a minimum income to the poor through the tax system: e.g., the negative income tax.
2. Explore the utility of a system of family allowances based on the number of dependents.

W.H.C.

Preliminary
For Discussion Purposes Only

TASK FORCE ON ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

Proposed Recommendations

April 27, 1966

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Title	Page
INTRODUCTION.	i
I. REACH AND SUSTAIN A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY	1
II. DEVELOP A COMPREHENSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE PLAN TO SET GOALS, TO MEASURE PROGRESS, AND TO STRUCTURE THE ACTION UNDERTAKEN "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"	4
III. CREATE MORE AND BETTER JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR MINORITY GROUPS.	7
IV. ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BY BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE EMPLOYERS	16
V. EXPAND TRAINING PROGRAMS AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES TO DEVELOP AND UTILIZE THE EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL OF NEGRO WORKERS	26
VI. DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM TO PREPARE DISADVANTAGED NEGRO YOUTHS FOR PRODUCTIVE JOBS.	37
VII. STRENGTHEN INCOME MAINTENANCE AND LABOR STANDARDS PROGRAMS.	44
VIII. STRENGTHEN AND RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED WELFARE PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE CONSTRUCTIVE BENEFITS TO THE POOR.	50

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

TASK FORCE PAPERS ARE

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS

FOR THE CONSIDERATION OF

THE COUNCIL AND SHOULD NOT

BE DISCUSSED WITH ANYONE

OTHER THAN THE CONFERENCE

STAFF AND TASK FORCE PERSONNEL

INTRODUCTION

The employment and income problems of the Negro population, to which the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare addressed itself, are complex, long-standing, and rooted in deep economic, social, psychological, and political disabilities. Bold, creative, and large-scale action is necessary if rapid progress is to be made toward equal opportunity, fair and full employment, decent living standards, full use of human potential, and security for the nation's Negro citizens.

There is no single, simple, or quick solution for the Negro's economic problems. The range of action needed to achieve an adequate level of employment and income security must cover the multi-faceted problems of many different sub-groups. Assistance to jobless Negro youths would not be adequate to meet the needs of underemployed Negro adults. Action to help farmers and hired farm workers would not necessarily improve the lot of people who work in the city. Programs to aid the unemployed mother who depends on public assistance for a livelihood would be of little utility for the Negro professional or businessman. Lasting solutions must be tailored, therefore, to the particular needs of specific components of the Negro population.

Moreover, it must be re-emphasized that the economic problems Negroes face along with other disadvantaged workers are compounded for Negroes by the continuing widespread presence of racial segregation and racial discrimination. Thus, solutions must go beyond strictly economic measures and be related to sociological, political, and psychological approaches.

The Task Force has attempted to consider all of the fundamental factors underlying the Negro's economic disadvantages. A wide-ranging battery of specific and realistic actions is proposed, calculated to achieve sharp progress on a variety of fronts--jobs, training, non-discrimination, supportive services, labor standards, income maintenance, public assistance, and others. In addition, stress is placed on the need to reach and maintain a full employment economy, as a setting which greatly increases the effectiveness of all other measures taken to improve the Negro's economic status.

The recommended action involves not merely one, but all sectors of the American community--the federal as well as state and local governments; business enterprises and organized labor; educational bodies; community organizations such as churches and health and welfare groups; and the spectrum of national associations. The intention is to mobilize the nation's brainpower and material resources for a systematic and many-sided effort to eliminate the artificial barriers that prevent the Negro's full participation in the economic and social process.

The Social and Economic Setting

Recommendations to improve the economic security and welfare of the Negro people must take into account the large magnitude of the Negro's disadvantages in the job market, the wide gap between the income and employment status of whites and nonwhites, and the changing characteristics and geographic distribution of the Negro population and labor force. They must take into account sharp and decisive advances in technology and other such forces which generate abundant benefits to some and disproportionate burdens to others.

Today there are more than 20 million Negro Americans. They comprise more than one-tenth of the nation's total population.

There are some 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force; i.e., employed or looking for jobs. They include about 3.5 million women. By 1970, the total is expected to reach ten million.

The figure of 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force presents an incomplete picture. Many members of the working age population are not in the labor force but could be if jobs and incentives in the form of decent earnings were consistently available to them. Thus, eight percent of all Negro men aged 25 to 64 were not in the labor force in 1963, compared with only five percent of comparable whites. On the other hand, the proportion of Negro women who work or seek jobs is considerably higher than the proportion of whites, since more of the former are primary family wage earners or must supplement the wages of their husbands.

Today, the Negro population is predominantly an urban one. About three-fourths of all Negroes live in urban areas, mainly in larger cities with populations of more than 50,000. The six cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington, D. C., and Los Angeles alone account for one-fifth of all Negro people. There are 18 cities in which 100,000 or more Negroes live--these cities account for almost one-third of the total Negro population. The concentration of Negroes in largely segregated areas of central cities, while white residents, industrial establishments, and offices move toward the suburbs, constitutes an important factor in framing proposals to improve economic and welfare conditions.

The heavy out-movement of Negroes from the South in search of better economic, educational, social, and political status (3.3 million left the South between 1940 and 1965) is an important factor in planning action programs. However, over one-half of all Negroes still live in the Southern States, and there are recent indications that the rate of out-migration is decreasing.

Most of the Negroes who still live in rural areas are in the South. Even in that region, however, almost three-fifths of all Negro people are urban residents. In 1960, two out of every five residents of Birmingham, Atlanta, and New Orleans were Negroes.

While urban problems must command an increasing proportion of our attention, we cannot overlook two facts. First, many of the hard-core economic security and welfare problems Negroes face are in rural areas. Second, those rural migrants who find their way into the stream of urban life bring with them problems which impede significantly their ability to adjust to present and future urban labor markets. The adjustment problems of the migrants is due, in part, to the failure of most urban areas to prepare for the influx of new residents and to take steps to ease their transition to urban life.

The Negro's disadvantaged status in the job market is underscored by government statistics on unemployment and underemployment. Even in today's booming economy (Feb. 1966), the unemployment rate for Negroes is about eight percent--more than twice the national average--and the gap between whites and nonwhites is even greater for married people and heads of households (particularly women) who are most in need of a job to support their families. Negroes only comprise eleven percent of the nation's labor force, but make up more than twenty percent of the nation's unemployed.

Not only is unemployment higher among Negroes, but they tend to be out-of-work for longer periods than whites. They also suffer heavily from underemployment, including part-time work, substandard pay, and the necessity to accept jobs below their skill or educational potentials.

The most serious unemployment problem is the shocking incidence of joblessness among Negro youths. Although this problem has been decreasing in recent months, fully 18 percent of out-of-school Negro youths aged 16 to 21 were unemployed in February 1966. This is twice the rate for white youths and it means that thousands of young Negro people who are actively looking for jobs cannot find a productive place in our society. In addition, it is estimated that many thousands of youths have withdrawn from the labor force, or refrained from entering it, because they have given up hope of finding decent employment.

The school "drop-out" problem among young people is another factor compounding the situation. Some three-fifths of out-of-school nonwhite youths aged 16 to 21 lack high school diplomas. In this era of technological advance and complex job requirements, "drop-outs" have twice the unemployment rates of high school graduates. When they are employed, they work for less pay and are more subject to layoffs and displacement by machines.

The Negro's disadvantages do not end when he finds a job. Even when he is employed, he tends to work in low-skill, low-wage occupations and industries with the lowest growth rates and the most limited opportunities for advancement and mobility.

In recent years, technological change and other job market conditions have led to a rising demand for skilled craftsmen, white collar workers, and service workers, while reducing opportunities for unskilled and semi-skilled laborers. In particular, the technical, professional, clerical, sales, and related white collar occupations have shown rapid growth. Yet, it is precisely in the skilled and white collar occupations that the Negroes are heavily under-represented, while they are concentrated in the unskilled and semi-skilled labor categories in which job opportunities are most restricted.

Only one-fifth of all nonwhite workers hold white collar jobs, compared with almost one-half of all white workers. Only seven percent of all Negro workers are in the professional and technical category--half the proportion among whites. Only three percent of the nonwhites are managers, officials, or proprietors, compared with eleven percent of the whites. The figures for clerical workers are nine percent versus seventeen percent; for sales workers, two percent versus seven percent; for skilled craftsmen, seven percent versus thirteen percent.

By contrast, twelve percent of all Negro workers are nonfarm laborers--three times the proportion of whites. And nonwhites are heavily represented among migratory and other seasonal farm workers and small tenant farmers who face severe underemployment, substandard earnings, and eventual replacement by new agricultural technology on large farms.

Negroes are heavily concentrated in the service occupations, which have shown rising manpower needs. However, they tend to be employed at household service, custodial, and other low-paid work rather than in the higher-paid service occupations.

To keep abreast of new technological demands and changes in occupational requirements, a fundamental alteration in the occupational structure of the Negro labor force is necessary. Otherwise severe problems of economic insecurity are likely to continue.

A major problem in improving the occupational status of the Negro labor force is its relatively low average educational attainment. In 1962, for example, less than one-third of the nonwhite members of the labor force had completed high school, compared with a majority of the whites. Educational attainment has, however, shown continuous improvement in successive generations. This fact represents an important element in plans to improve the Negro's lot.

On the other hand, achievements in occupational status and earnings by Negro workers have not kept pace with improvements in their educational attainment. The average Negro male with 16 or more years of school earns an annual income less than that earned by a white male with ten years of school.

Employment handicaps are reflected in the relatively low incomes of most Negroes. The income of the average Negro family is little more than half of the white family income. It is true that the Negro income level is rising, with greatest progress in Northern and Western urban areas. However, the rapid rise of incomes among whites has prevented a narrowing of the income gap between the races. Even when whites and Negroes are employed in the same occupation, and have had the same number of years of schooling, the average incomes of the two groups show this disparity.

Because of unemployment and low incomes, a much higher proportion of Negroes than of whites must rely on public assistance to supplement inadequate earnings. These poor people need not only money for subsistence, but a wide range of services to qualify them for productive employment, and to meet basic family, health, and welfare problems.

Poverty goes hand-in-hand with cultural deprivation, alienation from the mainstream values of American society, and unstable family relationships. The social and psychological consequences of discrimination and ghetto life are woven into the economic problems of the Negro and require consideration in economic security and welfare programs. For this reason, there is mounting awareness that conventional programs to solve the employment needs of Negroes must be accompanied by a wide range of supportive services designed to instill favorable work attitudes and character and personality traits, fill gaps in basic education, solve health and family problems, and overcome other barriers to the individual's labor force adjustments.

What Must Be Done

Taking into account the complexity and inter-relationships of the underlying factors, the Task Force has attempted to develop meaningful, action-oriented recommendations. The first recommendation made is a basic one which influences the rapidity and degree of success with which the other recommendations can be implemented. This basic recommendation is for the attainment and maintenance of a full employment economy.

The second recommendation is for the development of a Comprehensive Human Resource Plan. This Plan is intended to set goals, measure progress, and structure the action needed to attack the economic security and welfare problems of the Negro. It will pull together scattered approaches, insure full consideration of all relevant factors, and coordinate necessary programs in a systematic manner.

The next two recommendations include the creation of more and better job opportunities and the elimination of discrimination in employment. Stress is placed on action by both private and government employers. In particular, employment in state and local governments, which has risen rapidly from 5.4 million in 1957 to almost eight million in 1965, offers great potential opportunities for Negro job seekers. Public employment is growing in all regions, with the fastest growth in the South, pointing to the need for positive efforts to recruit and train Negroes in both local and state agencies.

A fifth recommendation is the expansion of training programs and supportive services, to provide Negroes with the skills, educational attainment, and other characteristics needed to qualify and successfully compete for the increasingly complex jobs of today's economy. Training for jobs in both government and private industry is considered.

Because of the severity of the unemployment problem among Negro youth and its effects on juvenile delinquency and other symptoms of social and economic deprivation, a sixth section of urgent recommendations for youth programs is presented. It is followed by a seventh set of recommendations on ways to strengthen income maintenance and labor standards programs, which currently do not provide adequate protection for Negroes and other workers in some important occupations and industries.

Finally, a series of recommendations are made to strengthen and restructure public assistance and related welfare programs. These recommendations take into account the needs of unemployed and underemployed Negroes and other disadvantaged people who, because of age, family status, physical handicaps, or other reasons cannot benefit directly from measures to help them adjust to the job market, but who require financial assistance and constructive rehabilitation or other services.

I. REACH AND SUSTAIN A FULL EMPLOYMENT ECONOMY

Why the recommendation is needed.

Measures to improve the economic security and welfare of Negroes take effect most rapidly in a healthy, growing, full employment economy. The availability of jobs at fair wages to all who need them eases the task of eliminating discrimination, upgrading the Negro work force, raising labor standards, and providing income security. Consequently, the attainment and maintenance of a full employment economy is a recommendation of high priority.

Unemployment among Negroes varies sharply with the general level of economic activity. During World War II, with unemployment at a low point, job opportunities for Negroes were at a new high. By 1949, when the nation's unemployment rate had risen to 5.5 percent, almost one out of every 10 nonwhite workers were out-of-work. As total unemployment dropped to 3 percent in 1953, the rate for nonwhites also declined to less than 5 percent. A new unemployment peak of almost 7 percent was reached in 1958, accompanied by an unemployment rate of more than 12 percent for nonwhites. Currently, the economy's high level of employment is again accompanied by a decline in joblessness among Negroes.

Closely related to the goal of full employment is the desirability of developing preventive programs to help Negro and other workers retain their gains in the face of continuous technological change, changes in the demand for civilian or defense products, shifts in the location of job opportunities, and other adjustments in manpower requirements. Such forward-looking action to avoid layoffs and other dislocations in the job market sharply reduces the dimensions of economic security problems.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Utilize fiscal, monetary, and manpower policies, public works programs, and other measures to sustain a full employment economy.
2. Develop preventive manpower programs designed to help adjust workers, industries, and areas in advance of major changes in manpower requirements. For example, manpower training programs should be established to retrain workers while they are still employed, in cases where their jobs are expected to be eliminated by technological change or cutbacks in production in the near future.

By Employers and Private Organizations

1. Cooperate in implementing government policies and programs to achieve full employment.
2. Develop and install programs to anticipate technological, market, or other developments, and to retrain or reassign workers so as to prevent lay-offs or other adverse effects.

II. DEVELOP A COMPREHENSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE PLAN TO SET GOALS, TO MEASURE PROGRESS, AND TO STRUCTURE THE ACTION UNDERTAKEN "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Why the recommendation is needed.

The emphasis of the White House Conference is on action. Effective action programs must be based on accurate information about the economic status and problems of Negroes. The programs must also be based on systematic planning, which mobilizes all available resources, selects specific goals, and schedules all necessary activities in accordance with definite timetables and priorities. Moreover, the component parts of the overall program must be efficiently coordinated to attain a maximum impact. The recommendation for a Comprehensive Human Resource Plan is intended to provide a flexible basis for such a creative, hard-hitting, action program.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop and conduct an effective program for collecting and analyzing information on the number, characteristics, employment, unemployment, and job opportunities of Negro workers. This program should focus most heavily on the 70-odd cities in which most urban Negroes are concentrated and on the 5 or 6 Southern States in which most rural Negroes live. Data should be obtained for both urban and rural areas, and on a neighborhood basis.
2. Develop and keep up-to-date a Human Resource Budget:
   a. Identifying the number, types, and problems of Negro youths, unskilled workers, older workers, women, and other specific groups in need of intensive manpower services;

b. Establishing specific goals and timetables for providing these services;

c. Determining the extent to which existing government and nongovernment programs can help meet the goals;

d. Indicating the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals;

e. Assigning definite priorities and targets for action by specific agencies.

3. Systematically evaluate the progress of Negroes in the job market and the effectiveness of government and nongovernment services in meeting their needs.

4. Assign definite responsibilities for the above steps to the Department of Labor and other appropriate agencies.

III. CREATE MORE AND BETTER JOB OPPORTUNITIES FOR NEGROES

Why the recommendation is needed.

The availability of decent job opportunities at fair wages is essential to the economic and social progress of the Negro. The high rate of unemployment and underemployment among Negroes; their concentration in low-paying jobs at the bottom of the skill ladder; their vulnerability to displacement by automation--all are factors at the very heart of their insecurity, poverty, and waste of human resources.

This section of recommendations approaches job creation and expansion of employment opportunities through improvements in economic measures and manpower utilization. Action to eliminate discrimination in employment is covered in the following section. The job creation recommendations call for affirmative action by both private and government employers, labor organizations, and community groups. The recommendations are tailored to the special needs of various subgroups in the Negro labor force, ranging from unskilled workers who need special help in adjusting to the demands of the job market to skilled Negro professionals and business people. They take account of the needs of workers in both urban and rural areas, and include measures not only to aid jobless workers, but to upgrade employed workers into more skilled, higher-paying occupations.

Subrecommendation A

Make positive efforts to improve job opportunities for Negroes.

Action Required:

By Employers and Labor Unions

1. Positive recruitment of Negro workers.
2. Review the work potential of Negro staff members to insure full use of their potential and to encourage upgrading to more skilled and managerial jobs.
3. Review official job descriptions to eliminate excess educational, skill, and test score requirements.
4. "Re-engineer" job duties to provide employment opportunities for low-skill workers where this will not impair the employment status of other workers.
5. Locate new business establishments and government offices in areas accessible to Negro workers. For example, many establishments being located in suburban areas and industrial parks to which commuting from Negro residential areas is difficult and expensive could have been located in more convenient inner-city areas.
6. Increase job opportunities for Negroes in the skilled crafts by:
   a. Actively recruiting Negroes into craft unions;

b. Helping Negro youths to qualify for apprenticeship programs by establishing pre-apprenticeship training and by revising selection criteria to eliminate unnecessary barriers.

Subrecommendation B

Develop and aggressively administer programs to improve job opportunities for Negroes in rural-farm areas.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop an experimental program to give Negro farm operators the means and incentives to gain ownership of, and successfully operate, farms through a combination of loans, grants, training, counseling, and technical assistance.
2. Expand community development programs to create new non-farm job opportunities in rural areas without creating unemployment elsewhere, and expedite tests of the economic development district approach (delineating districts around central cities with development potential, and emphasizing the development of job opportunities in these central cities as a means of providing additional employment and other economic benefits for both the rural and urban residents of the district) authorized under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.
3. Develop and establish a federally subsidized program to provide off-season or part-time work opportunities to supplement the incomes of underemployed farm people.
4. Experiment with new ways to provide year round employment for migratory and other seasonal farm workers and to build a skilled and stable farm work force.

5. Revise agricultural price support and production stabilization programs to insure that operators of small farms receive adequate assistance; to require farm employers to pass on some of their gains from government programs to their hired farm workers, in the form of higher wages and more adequate labor standards; and to provide adjustment allowances and other assistance to hired workers and small farm operators adversely affected by agricultural support programs.

By State and Local Governments

1. Utilize federal financial incentives to plan and conduct effective community development programs to improve community facilities and human resources and to expand job opportunities.

Subrecommendation C

Establish a federally financed work program to provide constructive and socially useful employment and on-the-job training for jobless and underemployed workers.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop, supervise, and provide resources for an employment program for jobless and underemployed workers.
2. Provide work assignments on government activities for some enrollees.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Furnish federally subsidized work-training opportunities on socially useful projects which would not have been otherwise performed.

Subrecommendation D

Encourage ownership of business enterprises by Negroes.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Increase the availability of federal loans, grants, and technical assistance under such legislation as Title IV of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 and the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.

By Business

1. Extend credit and franchises to Negroes.
2. Encourage joint ventures by white and Negro businessmen.

Subrecommendation E

Improve the access of Negro workers to all available jobs in the community.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Encourage and finance studies of local transportation and employment patterns.
2. Support the construction of roads and other transportation facilities to help bring together workers and available jobs.
3. Locate federal offices and other establishments in places easily accessible to residential areas in which Negroes live. (See Recommendation III A. 5.)
4. Provide tax credits and other incentives for private employers to locate new establishments in areas with substantial unemployment problems.

By Local and State Governments

1. Evaluate and modify local transportation routes, fares, and facilities to improve the access of Negroes to available jobs.

By Private Employers

1. Locate new business establishments in areas accessible to Negro workers. (See Recommendation III A. 5.)

IV. ELIMINATE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT BY BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE EMPLOYERS

Why the recommendation is needed.

Racial discrimination in employment has had a long and shameful history in our country. From the nation's point of view, it has barred the Negro from making his maximum contribution to the productive life of our society. From the viewpoint of the individual Negro, it has served as a barrier to the full use of his human potentials-- often relegating him to low-paid, low-skill jobs offering the lowest levels of economic security and occupational dignity.

Recent years have seen the development of new legal tools to combat discrimination. Of greatest potential impact is Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination by employers, labor unions, and employment agencies. Other titles of this Act, Executive Order 11246 banning discrimination in government contract work, state and local fair employment practice laws, and recent rulings of the National Labor Relations Board are also of great significance. These tools need strengthening and effective and rapid implementation.

The recommendations in this section provide for effective use of federal government powers to end discriminatory practices. At the same time, the roles of private employers, labor organizations, state and local governments, and community groups are stressed. The recommendations constitute a community-wide effort to make equal employment opportunities a reality.

Subrecommendation A

Greatly strengthen efforts by employers and labor unions to eliminate discrimination in hiring, assigning, and upgrading employees.

Action Required:

By Government Employers

1. Eliminate discrimination in Federal, State, local governments. The federal government should become a model employer. Southern States should give special emphasis to eliminating discrimination in state employment, following-up on the progress already made in such states as Kentucky.

By Private Employers

1. Issue and enforce anti-discrimination policies, and improve company records on the hiring and employment of Negro personnel.
2. Employ more Negroes in personnel and supervisory positions responsible for hiring and evaluating employees.
3. Withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination.

By Labor Unions

1. Establish and maintain non-discriminatory membership policies.
2. Enforce non-discrimination clauses in collective bargaining contracts covering hiring, tenure, terms and conditions of employment, work assignments, and advancement.

By Community Organizations such as Churches, Educational, and Health and Welfare Groups and Associations

1. Provision of technical assistance by national organizations to persuade and help local affiliates drop discriminatory practices.
2. Withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination; e.g., "Project Equality" of the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice.

Subrecommendation B

Strengthen Title VII (Prohibition of Discrimination by Employers, Unions, and Employment Agencies) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Amend Title VII to:

   a. Expand coverage to employees of state and local governments, private membership clubs, educational institutions, and employers and unions with eight or more employees or members.

   b. Authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue "cease and desist" orders.

   c. Authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to order monetary awards to persons suffering financial loss through denial of equal employment opportunity.

2. Strengthen administration of Title VII, including:

   a. Establishing federal guidelines for tests used by employers to evaluate current and prospective employees and developing performance criteria and other enforcement aids.

   b. Mandatory review of promotion programs and seniority systems.

   c. Increase use of complaints initiated by Commissioners to alter basic patterns of discrimination.

Subrecommendation C

Eliminate discrimination in State or local programs financed by federal funds.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Intensify enforcement efforts under Title VI (Prohibition of Discrimination in State or Local Programs Financed by Federal Funds) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including:
   a. Developing specific criteria by which to measure compliance with federal rules.
   b. Expanding the training of state and local staffs to inform them of federal requirements and provide guidence in ways to eliminate discrimination.
2. Insure Negro representation on state and local advisory, planning, and action committees in federally subsidized programs; e.g., agricultural programs, vocational education, training programs under the Manpower Development and Training Act, community development programs under the Public Works and Economic Development Act, activities under the Economic Opportunity Act, and housing and urban renewal programs.

By State and Local Governments

1. Cooperate with the federal government in measures to effectuate Title VI.

Subrecommendation D

Prevent discrimination in employment on government contract work.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Strengthen the administration of Executive Order 11246 (Nondiscrimination on Government Contracts) by:

   a. Compliance reviews prior to the award of contracts.

   b. Requiring employers to demonstrate affirmative action to insure equal employment opportunity.

   c. Increasing compliance budget and staff in federal agencies with compliance responsibilities.

   d. Establishing specific performance criteria for objective measurement of compliance.

By State and Local Governments

1. Develop and enforce rules for nondiscrimination on government contract work.

Subrecommendation E

Enact and improve State and local Fair Employment Practice laws and programs.

Action Required:

By State and Local Governments

1. Enact F.E.P. laws in States and cities that do not yet have such programs.

Subrecommendation F

Undertake technical assistance and educational programs to help employers, unions, and others develop capabilities for providing equal employment opportunities and to reduce employment prejudice and discrimination.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Combat misinformation, prejudice, and discrimination through a large scale educational program directed at employers, labor union officials, educators, counselors, personnel managers and others responsible for teaching, selecting, and evaluating employees.
2. Expand programs to provide realistic guidance to employers and unions facing problems in complying with nondiscrimination policies.
3. Provide an effective means for employers and unions to exchange information on their experience in attacking discriminatory practices.

By State and Local Governments

1. Encourage the establishment of State and Local Equal Opportunity Councils and the convening of conferences to give leadership to anti-discrimination efforts.
2. Insure the teaching of constructive racial attitudes in school systems.

By Community Organizations

1. Develop and conduct educational programs for such groups as churches, women's organizations, and local business and professional organizations.

V. EXPAND TRAINING PROGRAMS AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES TO DEVELOP AND UTILIZE THE EMPLOYMENT POTENTIAL OF NEGRO WORKERS

Why the recommendation is needed.

Discrimination, high rates of unemployment and underemployment, relegation to low-skill jobs, and poverty have left their mark on the Negro labor force. A relatively high proportion of Negro workers lack the educational attainment and occupational skills needed to compete for many of the jobs in today's increasingly complex economy. This is especially true of white collar and technical jobs. The problem is made more severe by the migration of hundreds of thousands of Negroes from rural to urban areas, often without the kinds of vocational skills demanded for nonfarm work, and often lacking adequate knowledge of city life and services. Many of these people were persuaded to move to cities by employers and city officials during periods of labor shortage, such as World War II, and they suffered substantial unemployment and underemployment in subsequent periods of reduced manpower requirements.

There is a crucial need to make available occupational training and related basic and remedial education to help prepare jobless Negroes for employment. There is also a need for training to upgrade employed Negroes who are working below their skill potentials. In many cases, existing training or educational programs are of inadequate size, inconveniently located, and not geared to the needs of disadvantaged groups. On-the-job training by employers has also been relatively limited for Negroes.

Formal training is not enough to assist Negroes at the lower end of the economic scale, where poverty is often accompanied by cultural deprivation and social disorganization. People in this group require a variety of supportive services to ease their adjustment to the demands of the job market. They need specialized help in solving health, family, housing, and welfare problems which interfere with their success at seeking and holding jobs. Those who migrate from the countryside to the city often need help in adjusting to their new environment. Many disadvantaged people require counseling and related services to develop effective work, job-seeking, and human relations attitudes and behavior patterns. New institutions to rehabilitate persons with especially severe adjustment problems must be developed.

This set of recommendations covers training programs and supportive services to meet these urgent needs. It includes steps to strengthen government services, as well as measures to utilize the facilities and experience of nongovernment organizations.

Subrecommendation A

Develop and implement training and upgrading programs directed especially at disadvantaged workers.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Provide additional incentives to stimulate employers to undertake or expand education and training programs without reducing their previous training efforts.
2. Use government contracting authority to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with work on government contracts.

By Business and Labor

1. Introduce programs to encourage the reinvestment of gains from rising productivity into training and upgrading programs.

Subrecommendation B

Undertake a massive attack on adult illiteracy and other basic educational deficiencies which reduce employment and occupational training opportunities.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand resources available for local adult basic education programs and experiment with new ways of motivating and teaching adults with low educational attainment.

By Educational Authorities and Community Organizations

1. Expand basic education programs and gear teaching methods and the location of classes to the needs and characteristics of disadvantaged people.

Subrecommendation C

Strengthen services to minority groups by public Employment Service agencies.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Federalize the employment service system.
2. Develop strong anti-discrimination practices in the Employment Service.
3. Strengthen the Federal-State employment service system by stronger national standards, better staffing, intensifying work with minority groups in rural areas, insuring that state personnel are covered by merit systems, and providing additional funds to improve services for minority group members.
4. Undertake Human Resources Development Programs in major urban areas, taking an individualized approach to the needs of disadvantaged workers. This should include establishment of Human Resource Centers in several cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance such as diagnosis of needs, individual counseling, referral to health, welfare, or other services, referral to training, and specialized job development and placement under continuing supervision.

By State Governments

1. Cooperate in a positive manner with federal government efforts to improve Employment Service operations.
2. Eradicate discriminatory practices in selection and referral of job applicants.

Subrecommendation D

Expand and increase the effectiveness of the federally financed program for training unemployed and underemployed workers under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Make positive efforts to include more Negro trainees by liberalizing the recruitment, testing, and selection process.
2. Place greater stress on on-the-job training, and maintain closer contact with employers regarding job requirements and placement of trainees.
3. Reduce time lags and paper work in establishing training projects.
4. Expand MDTA training in nonoccupational subjects needed to improve the employability or trainability of disadvantaged workers; e.g., remedial education, communication skills, work habits, attitudes, personal appearance and hygiene, etc.
5. Expand training to upgrade employed Negro workers by defraying unusual costs incurred by employers in the course of preparing severely disadvantaged workers for better jobs.
6. Allow greater flexibility in MDTA training allowances, including:
   a. Increasing allowance to the level of public assistance payments where needed to induce public assistance recipients to accept occupational training.

b. Reducing the eligibility requirement of two years of work experience to one year, thus allowing more youths and adult women to qualify for allowances.

c. Raising training allowances in courses of long duration.

7. Amend the MDTA to establish an extensive program of vocational guidance and occupational training for inmates of Federal, State and local penal institutions.

8. Expand and expedite experimental and demonstration programs, including programs to help former prison inmates obtain surety bonds needed to qualify for employment and the provision of financial assistance and supplemental services to unemployed workers who are moving to out-of-area jobs.

By State Governments

1. Stress positive efforts to include Negro trainees in training programs and to develop programs geared to their special needs.

By Business and Labor

1. Cooperate in establishing MDTA on-the-job training programs to help Negro workers find employment or advance to more skilled jobs.

Subrecommendation E

Develop and implement a large scale program to facilitate the economic and social adjustment of rural Negroes migrating to the city.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Develop and provide resources for a program to assist rural Negroes migrating to the city including:
   a. Centers in rural surplus labor areas to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for jobs and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling.
   b. Reception facilities in urban labor demand areas equipped to help the in-migrants solve employment and housing problems; to make available to them the range of health, welfare, and other urban services; and to provide temporary quarters (Halfway Houses, Youth Hostels) for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period.
   c. Relocation allowances under adequate safeguards to help migrants meet moving and subsistence costs, without imposing burdens on the target communities.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Support the adoption and implementation of a large scale program to help disadvantaged people migrating to the city from rural areas.

2. Provide centers and reception facilities in rural and urban areas, under federal subsidies, standards, and coordination.

VI. DEVELOP AND IMPLEMENT AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM TO PREPARE DISADVANTAGED NEGRO YOUTHS FOR PRODUCTIVE JOBS

Why the recommendation is needed.

The shockingly high rate of unemployment among Negro youths-- both male and female-- their unduly high rate of school drop-outs, and disturbing evidence of social disorganization among some young residents of the impoverished Negro ghetto are problems of such magnitude and urgency that a separate section of recommendations has been devoted to them.

The recommendations in this section are directed at the fundamental problems and needs of youth, rather than the elimination of superficial symptoms. Such needs include greatly strengthened vocational education facilities, expansion of counseling services, and more and better government work experience and training activities. Creative experimentation is needed to develop and test new ways to help young people with especially severe labor force handicaps. At the same time, the need to improve opportunities for youths with potential for advancement into higher professional and technical occupations is also given consideration.

Subrecommendation A

Greatly expand and strengthen high school vocational education programs.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand resources for grants to improve vocational education in the states.
2. Strengthen standards for the content and quality of vocational education subsidized by federal funds.

By State and Local Governments

1. Revise vocational education programs to emphasize training in new or growing occupations, to utilize the latest equipment, and to narrow the gap between the school and work place.
2. Expand and improve vocational training in rural areas, gearing it realistically to non-agricultural occupations in which most rural youth must seek employment, and to potential movement to urban areas.
3. Expedite the establishment of area vocational schools authorized under the Vocational Education Act of 1963.

Subrecommendation B

Greatly expand and strengthen counseling services for in-school youths, making available skilled vocational advisors who are acquainted with the requirements of industry, motivating Negro youths toward jobs in which opportunities are increasing, and reducing dropouts.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Provide resources to assist educational and Employment Service authorities to sharply expand and improve counseling services. A target of at least one full-time counselor for every 100 youths in schools in poverty areas should be set.
2. Finance more adequately and strengthen programs to train more and better counselors, with emphasis on training in dealing with the problems of Negro youth.

By State and Local Governments

1. Expand and improve vocational counseling services in schools and public employment offices, including counseling on related health and welfare needs which affect adjustments in the job market.

By Community Organizations

1. Supplement the counseling services of government, with emphasis on the needs of disadvantaged youths with especially severe employment and training problems.

Subrecommendation C

Expand opportunities for Negroes to prepare for professional and technical jobs.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand assistance to improve the education available in small, predominantly Negro colleges.
2. Develop and conduct special programs to help graduates of smaller, predominantly Negro colleges qualify for job opportunities available in the health, education, scientific, or other growing fields.
3. Strengthen programs of financial assistance to needy students.

By State and Local Governments

1. Develop and conduct programs to improve the educational potential of predominantly Negro colleges and to assist disadvantaged Negro students.

By Business, Labor, Community Organizations

1. Provide financial assistance to predominantly Negro colleges and scholarships to qualified needy students.
2. Actively recruit Negro youths into management or technical training programs.

Subrecommendation D

Expand and strengthen the Neighborhood Youth Corps.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Extend and improve NYC services by legislative action to provide additional resources, reduce the minimum eligibility age from 16 to 14, increase the maximum age from 22 to 24, and facilitate the use of MDTA training to prepare Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates for employment. (See also recommendation III-C.)

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Utilize federal financial assistance to provide more and better work opportunities and supportive services for Neighborhood Youth Corps enrollees.

Subrecommendation E

Intensify experimentation to develop new ways of meeting the employment and training needs of minority youths.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand experimental and demonstration programs currently authorized under the Manpower Development and Training Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, the Vocational Education Act, and other laws.
2. Experiment with programs geared to the special needs of jobless Negro girls and young women, with residential training and work-experience programs in urban settings for problem youths, and with employment of juveniles who have police records.

By State and Local Government and Community Organizations

1. Propose and participate in experimental programs.
2. Furnish probationary employment to juveniles with police records involving only minor crimes.

By Business and Labor

1. Participate more directly in proposing and operating experimental programs for youths, adding to experience already gained by industry in operating Job Corps centers.

VII. STRENGTHEN INCOME MAINTENANCE AND LABOR STANDARDS PROGRAMS

Why the recommendation is needed.

The strengthening of income maintenance and labor standards programs is of special importance for Negroes, who are heavily concentrated in occupations and industries which pay low wages, provide only intermittent employment, and are excluded from protective labor standards legislation. For example, extension of minimum wage laws, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, and laws protecting the right to join labor unions to currently excluded agricultural and service workers would greatly contribute to the economic security of large numbers of Negro workers. Such protection would help to raise incomes to adequate levels and would reduce the dependence of impoverished Negroes on public assistance. Improved labor standards and income safeguards would also help to provide the Negro work force with the dignity, self-respect, and security needed to motivate workers to develop their skills, actively seek employment, and make their maximum contribution in the job market.

Subrecommendation A

Improve federal minimum wage and child labor standards.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Expand coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to currently excluded industries and occupations in which minority groups are heavily concentrated; e.g., service and agricultural jobs.
2. Increase the minimum wage. Provide for adjustment programs to help disemployed workers obtain gainful employment.
3. Prohibit child labor outside of school hours on farms except those operated by the child's own family.

Subrecommendation B

Extend the protection and benefits of collective bargaining to occupations and industries in which Negroes are concentrated.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Extend the protection of the Labor-Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries; e.g., agriculture.

By State Government

1. Insure, through State laws and programs. protection of collective bargaining rights for workers excluded from the Labor-Management Relations Act.

By Labor Organizations

1. Intensify efforts to organize workers in service, agricultural, and other occupations in which Negroes are heavily concentrated.

Subrecommendation C

Improve the effectiveness of the unemployment insurance system.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Provide and strengthen national standards for unemployment insurance, including:

   a. Extending coverage to small employers, farm workers, agricultural processing workers, employees of non-profit institutions, and other currently excluded groups.

   b. Raising the level of benefits to at least 50% of the average weekly wage, with a target of 66-2/3% in future years.

   c. Extending the duration of unemployment insurance benefits to a minimum of 26 weeks.

   d. Providing additional federal assistance for benefit payments to the long-term unemployed and to help States meet unusually severe unemployment situations.

Subrecommendation D

Extend Workmen's Compensation to farm workers and other excluded groups.

Action Required:

By State Governments

1. Enact legislation to strengthen Workmen's Compensation programs.

VIII. STRENGTHEN AND RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED WELFARE PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE CONSTRUCTIVE BENEFITS TO THE POOR

Why the recommendation is needed.

Welfare programs as they are presently operated fall far short of providing an adequate living to the poor. The annual income available to families under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program only averages about $1.15 per day per person for all of the costs of living. Aged and disabled recipients of public assistance receive only between $900 and $1000 a year and blind recipients receive slightly over $1100 a year.

In addition to low cash payments, the provision of services to help poor people overcome the barriers to self-sufficiency is also limited in most cases. Widespread shortages of trained staff members add to this problem.

Both Federal and State laws impose eligibility conditions that deny help to some needy people. The most important group excluded from coverage under Federal law are families with children in which the parent or parents are employed but whose earnings do not provide even a meager living. More than half of the children among the poor are thus excluded from eligibility for Federally-aided public assistance. Also excluded are persons nearly but not yet 65 and young and middle-aged couples or individuals who are not blind or disabled and who have no minor children. Requirements for a specified length of residence and special requirements that exclude some families with children that are headed by women also result in many needy persons not receiving aid.

The limitations of existing programs bear particularly heavily on Negroes. More heads of households in the nonwhite than the white population work part-time or for only part of the year. Negro earnings tend to be lower. The proportion of nonwhite families headed by women is almost two and one-half times the corresponding proportion of white families. The risk of poverty among children in nonwhite families headed by employed women is about two and one-half times that of white children in such families. Finally, the southern states have conspicuous difficulty in financing adequate assistance programs, even with a relatively high tax effort for public services. Since half of the total number of nonwhite poor people and only about one-third of all white poor people live in the South, this situation adversely affects Negro families.

The recommendations in this section seek to assure assistance to all needy persons, to assure reasonable payment, and to provide adequate staff and nonmonetary services. In addition, some thought has been given to more basic approaches to the poverty problem, beyond the limits of conventional public assistance programs.

Subrecommendation A

Raise the level of public assistance benefits to furnish a standard of living compatable with health and decency.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the States.

Subrecommendation B

Insure the availability of public assistance to all impoverished people.

Action Required

By Federal Government

1. Eliminate the separate categories of public assistance and substitute a single category based exclusively on need.
2. Under existing programs, require that Aid to Families with Dependent Children be granted to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.
3. Reduce or eliminate residence requirements for public assistance or reimburse the States for payments to nonresidents.

Subrecommendation C

Strengthen the administration of welfare programs.

Action Required

By Federal Government

1. Enact legislation to permit operation of public welfare programs by the Federal Government in states which cannot or will not meet federal standards.
2. Greatly expand technical assistance to both rural and urban communities and improve the geographic distribution of funds to insure that all areas of comparable need have access to federally subsidized programs for disadvantaged people which are secured largely on the basis of local development; e.g., community action projects under the Economic Opportunity Act and community development projects under the Public Works and Economic Development Act.

By State and Local Governments

1. Simplify the process through which need for assistance is determined for public assistance applicants.

Subrecommendation D

Adjust public assistance rules to encourage recipients to take jobs or training.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish rules and standards for State public assistance agencies to encourage public assistance recipients to seek employment. (These rules should guide State agencies to take action such as listed below.)

By State and Local Governments

1. Increase the amount of job earnings which can be retained by public assistance recipients without reducing the level of benefits.
2. Insure that recipients who go to work will not endanger their immediate access to benefits in times of future need.
3. Continue non-monetary services to recipients who have found jobs, where such services are needed to help with long-range adjustments.
4. Permit teenagers to keep a substantial proportion of job earnings or MDTA or NYC allowances when assessing the welfare needs of recipient families.

Subrecommendation E

Expand non-monetary welfare services to alleviate the basic causes of poverty.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Establish standards and provide additional resources for State and local governments and community organizations to provide supplemental non-monetary services to needy people including the services listed below.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Establish a network of service centers in all areas of need to provide a range of services including consumer education legal assistance; vocational and personal counseling; training in hygiene, home economics, and citizenship; and related activities.
2. Extend free family planning services and materials on a voluntary basis to both married and unmarried public assistance recipients.
3. Expand rehabilitative services such as: facilities for day care of children, occupational training and basic education for welfare recipients, counseling, highly selective and supervised job placement of marginal workers, and work experience programs.

Subrecommendation F

Relieve the acute staffing problem in public assistance agencies.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Stimulate and provide resources for a greatly expanded program of recruitment and training for professional case workers, aimed at a sharp reduction of the number of clients served by each worker. A target of no more than 60 clients per professional case worker should be set.
2. Provide resources for the payment of higher salaries to case workers, to make them comparable with other skilled and arduous professions.
3. Analyze case work and related activities to determine which supplemental work can be assisgned to subprofessionals.
4. Develop and provide resources for large scale programs to recruit and train subprofessional aides in order to reduce the burden of the professional staff.

By State and Local Governments and Community Organizations

1. Revise salary schedules for professional case workers.
2. Undertake a substantial reduction in the number of clients assigned to each case worker.
3. Employ nonprofessional staff members to handle the more routine tasks and as "expediters" to locate and inform poor people about available programs and to help them utilize services.

Subrecommendation G

Explore new approaches to assure a minimum level of income.

Action Required:

By Federal Government

1. Explore means of guaranteeing a minimum income to the poor through the tax system.
2. Explore the utility of a system of family allowances based on the number of dependents.

CLARK COLLEGE
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30314

OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT

June 13, 1966

Dr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
Director, Labor Program
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dear Emory:

This is just a note to express my personal appreciation for your very excellent cooperation with the Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare for the June 1-2 White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights." Many of the recommendations contained in our original "cookbook" did not find their way into the Council's report to the Conference; nevertheless, the reaction in the press and by Conference participants indicates that we did deal with some rather substantive recipes as approaches to the problem.

I am not sure at this point as to whether the Task Force will have anything further to do. If there is any reason to call upon you in connection with the report to be made to The President, I shall be in hasty contact with you.

Kindest personal regards and best wishes.

Sincerely yours,

Vivian W. Henderson

VWH/ds

MEMBER UNITED NEGRO COLLEGE FUND FOUNDED 1944

Recommendations	Action Needed

III. Eliminate ~~ATTACK~~ DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT IN BOTH PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SECTORS

A. ~~Accelerate rate of progress by~~ strengthen~~ing~~th administration of Title VII (prohibition of discrimination by employers and unions and employment agencies) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 by:

Federal administrative action

* 1. Requesting more adequate budget and staff.

2. Establishing federal guidelines for tests used to evaluate current and prospective employees to insure that there are no artificial barriers to hiring and upgrading minority group members.

for enough? results test vs. intent test

* 3. Emphasis on programs to upgrade the Negro work force through mandatory review of promotion programs and of seniority systems.

4. Emphasizing positive remedial action in conciliation agreements, including encouragement of special recruitment and on-the-job training programs, and alteration of underlying patterns and conditions.

* 5. Extensive use of complaints initiated by Commissioners to alter basic patterns of discrimination.

6. Expanding educational programs to reduce discrimination in employment.

7. Stressing affirmative action to change discrimination patterns through such means as informal conferences with employers who have failed to aggressively recruit, train, or promote nonwhites ~~and educational programs.~~

(See B - below)

Recommendations	Action Needed
8. Strengthen liaison with civil rights organizations including briefing sessions and special materials for their field workers.
9. Develop performance criteria and other enforcement aids through research and analysis of reports from employers and unions.
B. Amend Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, including:	Federal legislative action
* 1. Expanding coverage to employees of state and local governments, private membership clubs, educational institutions, and employers and unions with 8 or more employees or members.
* 2. Authorizing the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission to issue cease and desist orders.
3. Aurhorizing the EEOC to order monetary awards to persons suffering financial loss through denial of equal employment opportunity.
4.

Recommendations	Action Needed
C. Strengthen the administration of Executive Order 11246 (nondiscrimination on government contracts) by:	Federal administrative action
1. Compliance reviews prior to the award of government contracts.
2. Requiring the employer to demonstrate affirmative recruitment, training, and promotion action directed at insuring equal employment opportunity.
3. Establishing specific performance criteria for objective measurement of compliance.
4. Increasing compliance budget and staff, in federal agencies with compliance responsibilities.
D. ~~Undertake aggressive~~ Effective enforcement of Title VI (prohibition on discrimination in state or local programs financed by federal funds) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964:	Federal administrative action
1. Expand staff and budget resources for enforcement.
2. Develop performance criteria and other enforcement aids.
3. Expand training programs for State and local staffs.
4. (See I below)

Recommendations	Action Needed
E. Develop more effective cooperation between federal, state, and local fair employment agencies.	Federal, state and local administrative action
F. Eliminate ~~Attack~~ discrimination in employment in Federal, state, and local governments. The Federal government should become model employer.	Federal, state, and local administrative action, supported by non-government community organizations
G. Conduct a comprehensive Government technical assistance program to help employers and unions develop capabilities for providing equal employment opportunities, to exchange information on the experience of employers and unions who have recently eliminated ~~reversed~~ discriminatory practices ~~policies~~, and to provide realistic guidance to employers and unions facing severe problems in complying with nondiscrimination policies.	Federal administrative action
H. Embark upon a massive educational program to reduce prejudice among employers, unions, government officials, workers, and the general population. members leaders? not parallel	Federal legislative and administrative action

Recommendations	Action Needed
1. Establish an appropriate office with specific responsibility for coordinating such a program, and with adequate staff and funds.
2. Develop effective educational materials for distribution to schools, unions, and employer associations.
3. Aggressively seek opportunities to present facts and ideas to groups of industry, labor, and other representatives.
4. Develop and support special programs to create constructive racial attitudes among children and teenagers through school channels.
5. Develop nationwide educational programs for teachers, counselors, personnel directors, supervisors, and others who teach, select, or evaluate people.
6. Develop and utilize emblems, symbols, awards, contests, and related ideas to reward cooperating organizations, and to stimulate interest and pride in anti-discrimination activities.
7. Encourage establishment of local and State Equal Opportunity Councils to stimulate anti-discrimination efforts.
Under D ~~I.~~ as 4. Review Federal government economic assistance programs to insure nondiscriminatory administration. Utilize them in a positive manner to break existing area patterns of job and business discrimination; e.g.,	Federal administrative action

Recommendations	Action Needed
a 1. Loan and technical assistance programs of the Department of Agriculture (recently surveyed by the Civil Rights Commission).
b. 2. Loan and grant programs under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965.
c 3. Activities of the Small Business Administration.
J. Insure minority group representation on State and local advisory, planning, and action committees, such as those Agricultural & Vac. ed., under the MDTA, the Public Works and Economic Development Act, the Economic Opportunity Act, and other federally aided programs ~~related programs~~.	Federal administrative action
K. Elimination of ~~Attack~~ racial discrimination in apprenticeship programs;	Employers, labor unions, and Federal administrative action (State action?)
1. Develop new techniques to recruit young Negroes into all craft unions. FEV Info Center
2. Expand pre-apprenticeship training programs to help disadvantaged youths qualify for admission.
3. Revise selection criteria to eliminate unnecessary barriers which handicap minority group members.

Recommendations	Action Needed
L. Develop a well-publicized and systematic program to eliminate discriminatory employment practices in ~~private~~ nonprofit organizations, and utilize the influence of such organizations by:	Action by nonprofit organizations and Federal administrative action Tech Assistance?

1. Working through national non-profit organizations to persuade local affiliates to drop discriminatory practices.

2. Persuading nonprofit organizations such as churches and hospitals to withdraw business from suppliers and contractors who engage in discrimination.

3. Provision of technical assistance by national organizations to local affiliates to help them review hiring practices and standards and to engage in positive recruitment of minority group members.

Recommendations	Action Needed

IV. HUMAN RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AND SUPPORTIVE SERVICES

A large scale effort to

A. Develop, stimulate, and implement ~~large-scale~~ training and upgrading programs by private employers, directed especially at disadvantaged workers:

Private industry; federal legislative action to provide incentives; support from labor unions

1. Introduce programs to encourage the reinvestment of gains from rising productivity into training and upgrading programs, both within and outside the plant.

? 2. Provide tax credits to stimulate in-plant education and training.

3. Use Federal Government contracting authority to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with work on government contracts.

~~B~~ F. Increase the effectiveness of the MDTA program, including:

Federal legislative and administrative action

1. Positive efforts to include more minority trainees by liberalizing ~~recruitment~~ ~~selection~~, testing, and selection processes.
2. Additional stress on on-the-job training;
3. Reducing paper work and time lags;
4. Maintaining closer contact with employers regarding job requirements and encouraging direct contact between prospective employers and trainees throughout the instruction process;

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Expanding MDTA training in fields other than specific occupations to enhance the employability or trainability of disadvantaged workers; e.g., training in remedial education, communication skills, work habits, attitudes, personal appearance and hygiene, etc.
6. Expanding training to upgrade employed workers by defraying the usual costs incurred by employers in the course of preparing disadvantaged workers for better jobs;
7. Greater flexibility in MDTA training allowances, including:
(a) Increasing allowances to the level of public assistance payments where needed to induce public assistance recipients to accept occupational training;
(b) Reducing the requirement of two years of work experience to one year, thus allowing more youths and adult women to qualify for allowances;
(c) Raising training allowances in training courses of long duration.
G ~~C~~. Amend the MDTA to institute a Federally financed program of vocational guidance and occupational training for inmates of Federal, State, and local penal institutions.	Federal legislative action
H. ~~D~~. Expand the MDTA experimental and demonstration program	Federal legislative and administrative action
1. Develop and test new ways of meeting the employment and training needs of disadvantaged workers.

Recommendations	Action Needed
2. Strengthen and expedite the experimental MDTA program under which former prison inmates are assisted in obtaining surety bonds needed to qualify for employment.
3. Expand the MDTA labor mobility demonstration program which provides financial assurance and supplemental services for unemployed workers who are moving to out-of-area jobs.
B. E. ~~Fill the gaps in a~~ Develop a comprehensive program for preparing disadvantaged youths for a productive place in the job market.	Federal, State and local administrative action
1. Greatly expand, update, and broaden high school vocational education programs, emphasizing training in new or growing occupations, utilizing the latest equipment, and closing the gap between the school and work settings.	Action by educational authorities and federal legislative action
2. Provide funds and training programs to sharply expand the number of counselors and counseling services for in-school youths, including efforts to motivate minority youths toward jobs in which opportunities are increasing, reduction of dropouts, and vocational guidance by skilled advisers who are acquainted with the requirements of industry.	Legislative and administrative action by federal and by local educational authorities
3. Greatly expand and improve vocational counseling and training in rural areas, gearing facilities realistically to nonagricultural occupations in which most rural youth must seek employment, and to potential movement to urban areas. Achieve rapid expansion of area vocational schools authorized under the Vocational Education Act of 1963.	Federal, state, and local legislative and administrative action
4. Expand government and nongovernment assistance to improve the quality and scope of education available in the small, predominantly Negro colleges. Conduct special programs to help graduates of smaller Negro colleges qualify for job opportunities available in the health or other growing technical fields.	Resources from all government and all nongovernment sources. Federal and state legislative and administrative action; action by educational authorities and industry

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Expand and strengthen the Neighborhood Youth Corps Program, including:	Federal legislative action
(a) Providing additional resources;
(b) Reducing the minimum eligibility age from 16 to 14;
(c) Admitting young people between the ages of 22 and 24 to the out-of-school work experience program in order to improve the employability of those with severe unemployment problems.
(d) Facilitating the use of MDTA training to prepare Neighborhood Youth Corps graduates for employment.
6. Experiment with Job Corps Programs in urban settings, realistically geared to the employment and social environment that participants are likely to face upon graduation from the Job Corps.	Federal administrative action
7. Revise the hiring practices of Federal, State, and local governments to permit the probationary employment of juveniles with police records involving only minor crimes.
F. Undertake a massive attack on adult illiteracy.	Federal and state legislative action; action by educational authorities and cooperating community agencies.

Recommendations	Action Needed
I ~~A~~. Develop and implement a large scale program to facilitate the economic and social assimilation of rural Negroes migrating to the city, including: 1. Provision of centers in rural surplus labor areas to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for job and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling. 2. Arranging reception facilities in urban labor demand areas, equipped to help the in-migrants to solve employment and housing problems; to make available to them the range of health, welfare, and other urban services; and to provide temporary quarters (Halfway Houses, Youth Hostels) for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period. 3. Provision of relocation allowances under adequate safeguards, to help migrants meet moving and subsistence costs without imposing burdens on the target communities.	Federal legislative action, in cooperation with action by state and local government and community agencies
~~B~~. ~~H~~. Strengthen Recruitment and job development programs for minority groups, including the Federal-State Employment Service System. ~~D~~ E 1. 2. Strengthen the Federal-State employment service system by stronger national standards, better staffing, prevention of discrimination, intensified work with minority groups in rural areas, insuring that State personnel are covered by merit systems, and providing additional funds to improve services for minority group members. ~~(Possible~~ Federalization of the E.S. system ~~has also been suggested)~~	Federal and state legislative and administrative action including implementation of recent Task Force report prepared for the Secretary of Labor

Recommendation	Action Needed
3. Undertake Human Resources Development Programs in major urban areas, taking an individualized approach to the needs of disadvantaged workers. This should include experimental Human Resource Centers in several cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance such as diagnosis of needs, individual counseling, referral to health, welfare, or other services, referral to training, and specialized job development and placement under continuing supervision. (These centers would be somewhat similar to Youth Opportunity Centers but they would deal with adults.)	Federal and State administrative and legislative action
4. Develop strong anti-discr practices in empl. services
E, D I. Expand the authority and basic conceptual framework of the Equal Employment Opportunities Commission to relate anti-discrimination efforts to a comprehensive manpower development program. This would include giving EEOC authority to refer workers to training programs, to provide funds for manpower development programs, and to take other positive measures.	Federal legislative action

Recommendation	Action Needed

V. ~~FILLING THE GAPS IN~~ Developing a Comprehensive Program for ECONOMIC SECURITY, welfare, AND LABOR STANDARDS

I ~~A~~. Utilize new approaches to assure a minimum level of income, including consideration of: — Federal legislative and administrative action.

1. ~~A "negative income tax" or other~~ Means of guaranteeing a minimum income to the poor through the tax system.

2. A system of family allowances, based on number of dependents.

B. Improve the effectiveness of the unemployment insurance system by: — Federal legislative action

1. Extending coverage to small employers, farm and agricultural processing workers, employees of non-profit institutions, and other currently excluded groups.

2. Raising the level of benefits to at least 50% of the average weekly wage, with a target of 66 2/3% in future years.

3. Extending the duration of unemployment insurance benefits to a minimum of 26 weeks.

4. Providing additional federal assistance for benefit payments to the long-term unemployed and to help States meet unusually severe unemployment situations.

Recommendation	Action Needed
C. Improve the effectiveness of public assistance programs in providing a minimum income for the poor by:	Federal legislative and administrative action.

1. Eliminating the separate categories of public assistance and substituting a single category: need. ~~If this is not feasible, provide Federal grants for an expanded category of General Assistance to cover cases that are not now protected.~~ Be a second choice

Under Existing Programs

3. Require that Aid to Families with Dependent Children be granted to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.

2. Establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the States.

4. Reduce or eliminate residence requirements for public assistance or reimburse the States for payments to nonresidents.

5. Adjust public assistance rules to encourage recipients to seek employment:

   (a) By increasing the amount of earnings which can be retained without reducing the level of benefits;

   (b) By insuring that recipients who go to work will not endanger their subsequent access to benefits in times of future need;

   (c) By continuing non-monetary services to recipients who have found jobs, where such services are needed to help with long-range adjustments;

   (d) By permitting teenagers to keep a substantial proportion of job earnings or MDTA or NYC allowances when assessing the welfare needs of recipient families.

Recommendation	Action Needed
Simplify the determination of need by.
D. ~~Improve "means tests" operations by:~~	State administrative action
1. Accepting certifications of need made by community agencies other than the Public Welfare Agency.
2. Experimenting with the substitution of affidavits from applicants for intensive means test investigations.
3. ~~Using average, rather than individual figures in estimating family needs.~~ Standardizing budget allowances rather than making detailed computations. Simplifying budget procedures by eliminating
E. Permit operation of public welfare programs by the Federal Government in States which cannot or will not meet Federal standards.	Federal legislative action
F. Expand non-cash welfare services to solve the basic causes of poverty among needy people:	Federal & State legislative & administrative action
1. Establish a network of service centers in all areas of need to provide a range of services including consumer education; legal assistance; vocational and personal counseling; training in hygiene, home economics, and citizenship; and related activities.
2. Extend free family planning services and materials on a voluntary basis to both married and unmarried public assistance recipients.
3. Separate the administration of welfare services from the more mechanical extension of cash assistance.

Recommendation	Action Needed
4. Expand rehabilitative services such as: facilities for day care of children, occupational training and basic education for welfare recipients, counseling, highly selective and supervised job placement of marginal workers, and work experience programs.
Alleviate the acute staffing problem ~~of staffing~~
G. ~~Solve the staffing crisis~~ in public assistance agencies:	Federal, State, & Local administrative action
1. Employ non-professional "expediters" to locate, identify, and inform poor people about available programs and to help them utilize services.
2. Develop case work and related activities which can be conducted by supplemental subprofessional personnel and develop large scale programs to recruit and train such aides in order to reduce the burden of the professional staff.
3. Provide resources for a substantial expansion in the number of case workers and for a reduction of clients per case worker.
4. Improve and expand programs to recruit and train professional case workers.
5. Provide higher salaries for case workers, to make them comparable with other skilled and arduous professions.

Recommendation	Action Needed
H. ~~Equalize and~~ Facilitate availability of ~~access by all areas and individuals to those~~ Federally subsidized programs for disadvantaged people which are ~~conducted~~ administered largely on the basis of local development, ~~proposal, and operation~~ of projects to all areas ~~individuals~~ of comparable needs.	Federal administrative action
1. Allocate available resources to insure the best geographic coverage, including both rural and urban areas.
2. A greatly expanded technical assistance to communities, both rural and urban, which lack the leadership, experience, or sophistication to develop, process, or conduct projects for their disadvantaged people.
A I. Protect and improve labor standards, including:	Federal and State legislative action
1. Expanding coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to currently excluded industries and occupations in which minority groups are heavily concentrated.
2. Increase the minimum wage under the FLSA, permitting adjustments to help workers of very low productivity obtain gainful employment.
3. Extend the protection of the Labor Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries.
4. Extend workmen's compensation to farm workers and other other excluded groups.
5. Prohibit child labor on farms outside of school hours.

Recommendation	Action Needed

Hold
Insert where appropriate

Expand Research for Strengthening Policies & Programs

~~VI.~~ ~~VII~~ RESEARCH AND ANALYSES

Ways & means of insuring adequate nat. aid standards

A. Conduct a study of the advantages and disadvantages of converting the ~~Federal-State~~ Public Assistance Program to a Federally operated program which would include: — including a study of Country — (Federal administrative action.)

1. Planning at the national level;
2. A Federalized welfare system with States and local agencies providing only emergency or temporary personal assistance;
3. Abolition of the present public assistance categories and the substitution of a single category based on need;
4. A Federal scale of welfare benefit levels;
5. Federal standards of eligibility.

B. Conduct an intensive study of the use of nonprofessionals in the welfare program, including ways in which nonprofessionals can assist professional case workers; the training of nonprofessional aides (including use of Negro colleges and the Job Corps); and examination of ways to gain acceptance of subprofessionals by professional case workers. — Federal administrative action.

Recommendation	Action Needed
C. Conduct an intensive study of a panel of migrants from rural to urban areas, tracing their experience, problems, motivations, and adjustments over a substantial time period.	Federal administrative action
D. Encourage identification by race in relevant records of employers, labor unions, the Employment Service, the Department of Agriculture, and other agencies in order to provide a basis for evaluating the employment and training status of nonwhites, and their participation in federal programs.	Federal administrative action
E. Devise a uniform core of required information for the records and reports used in compliance review under the Equal Employment Opportunity, Federal Contract Compliance, Plans for Progress, and related programs to collect uniform information about hiring, upgrading, personnel, and other employment practices.	Federal administrative action

Recommendation	Action Needed
F. Develop and test new methods of meeting the employment and training needs of disadvantaged groups in experimental and demonstration projects under the MDTA, the Vocational Education Act of 1963, the Economic Opportunity Act, and others.	Federal administrative action
G. Encourage the establishment of, and provide funds for university research centers to explore problems and solutions in the economic security and welfare fields for minority groups.	Federal administrative action
H. Expand research on the effects of housing discrimination and inadequate transportation facilities on the job opportunities of minority groups, and analyze potential solutions.	Federal administrative action
I. Introduce a solidly based statistical system for evaluating, regularly and continuously the extent to which Negro men and women are penetrating the job market, by a selection of neighborhoods, cities, metropolitan areas, and by region, and urban and rural location.	Federal, State, & Local administrative action

Recommendation	Action Needed
This may include a refined and comprehensive statistical program on a sound sampling basis for deriving current information about neighborhood employment, unemployment, and other characteristics, as well as job vacancy data related to the needs of minority group workers. Such a system could be coordinated with information collected regularly by the Office of Economic Opportunity on the characteristics of poverty areas, which could be compared with nonpoverty areas.
J. Improve the coordination of existing programs concerned with human resource development and utilization; e.g., the OEO program, the MDTA program, programs of DHEW, the Department of Commerce, and the Department of Agriculture. (The President's Committee on Manpower has established teams to coordinate services in 30 selected cities. It has been given responsibility for coordination of key OEO, Department of Labor, and Department of Health, Education and Welfare programs by Executive Order.) Provide adequate coordination on a regional or metropolitan area basis where necessary, and coordinate multi-source services in unified neighborhood centers, in poor areas.	Federal, State, & local administrative action

Memo

University of Wisconsin Extension Division

FROM Jim Stern DATE April 8, 1964

TO School for Workers Staff

Attached is a copy of a recent article by Edward Chase entitled "The Comong Economic Revolution." It summarizes the argument between Walter Heller and Charles Killingsworth concerning the causes of unemployment. I thought it might be of interest.

Jim

Roswell

THE COMING ECONOMIC REVOLUTION

by

Edward T. Chase

An important argument on national economic policy, smoldering for months now in academic corridors, in Congressional hearings, in foundation symposia, and in ignored position papers, has begun to break out into public view.

The argument is about unemployment and automation. It pits the President's Council of Economic Advisers against some of our leading university economists. The argument is addressed to the question of whether American economic malaise is structural in some new sense. And most particularly, it is about the nature and extent of measures required to reduce unemployment to a four per cent rate or less.

What is being argued is whether or not a radically different approach is needed to overcome the poverty afflicting the fifth of all American families with annual incomes of under $3,000, and to scotch the threat of such poverty spreading and deepening. Press discussion of President Johnson's new "poverty package", a comprehensive plan to combat poverty (the rediscovery of poverty is sweeping the country in faddist proportions), has lately stimulated widespread lay interest in the argument over the most effective cures for joblessness and privation.

One is tempted to say that the argument has not been equaled since the Keynesian revolution of the Thirties. In common with that revolution, which reversed classical doctrine by asserting the priority of mass consumer demand and the admissibility of government spending to stimulate it, the consummation of this one, in the sense of official acceptance of a position, may be achieved haltingly. A censensus in the current controversy may come agonizingly just too late. The impetus for today's argument is the spectacle of long-term unemployment--or, more precisely, the spectacle of conventional wisdom, now Keynesian, failing to adjust to the facts about such unemployment.

The argument ultimately touches upon everything from the gold drain and the growth rate to administered prices, cost-push inflation, and civil rights. But one can best enter into it by focusing on unemployment. Perhaps the most interesting aspect of the controversy has to do with the fresh evidence of the importance of capital investment in people in contrast to industrial plant.

Who are the antagonists? Well, we have, on what is now the right, Walter Heller and his Council of Economic Advisers, stigmatized as the cyclicalists and the devotees of aggregate demand. And, over here, we have the structuralists, a mixture of thinkers-about-cybernation, the younger bloods in the Department of Labor and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, and an array of academicians. The most formidable of them is Professor Charles C. Killingsworth, the manpower expert from Michigan State University. Killingsworth has starred in the discussions before Congressional hearings and at recent symposia on unemployment and labor market policy. There is reason to believe he has Heller and company on the defensive as they also begin to acknowledge the significance, if not quite the primacy, of the structuralists' case.

Hardcore unemployment up 60% of whole 1953-1963

But an old-timer in the Labor Department, Ewan Clague, the U.S. Commissioner of Labor Statistics, has put forth, in a brutally simple demonstration, some of the key data that go to the heart of the matter. Clague raises questions about the ability of the $11 billion tax cut to invigorate the economy in the light of the following: In the past decade, both in prosperous years and in slump years alike, the percentage of the unemployed defined as the "very long term unemployed," six months or more, has increased steadily. At midyear in 1953, they numbered 58,000, or 3.7 per cent of all unemployed; in 1957, they numbered 260,000, or 9.6 per cent; in 1960, 411,000, or 11.9 per cent; and in 1963, 643,000, or 15.8 per cent.

Half the rise in enemployment over the past decade, Clague demonstrates, is attributable to the longer duration of joblessness of those out of work, rather than any incidence of new unemployment deriving from cyclical slumps. This is an entirely new experience for the United States, with confounding implications for those whose faith rests upon fiscal and monetary manipulations. Meanwhile, corporate profits are at an all-time high, while about thirteen per cent of our industrial capacity goes unused, casting further doubt on the need or the likely efficacy of a tax cut as an incentive for business investment.

The conventional assumption has been that the labor market in a market economy has a self-regulating nature akin to the self-regulating character of the market itself. If this assumption is valid, then a tax cut, successfully stimulating the economy generally and nourishing demand and the requisite purchasing power, would melt away hard core, "structural" unemployment. But what has become increasingly evident, claim the structuralists, is that rapid and pervasive technological and demographic changes have decisively altered the character of the labor market so that it is much less responsive to overall market forces.

* * * * *

New Jobs/yr 1948-1956 902T

464T/yr 1957-62

To begin with, in the decade after World War II, the U.S. economy produced an average of 902,000 new jobs annually. From 1957 until 1962, however, it produced an average of only about 464,000 new jobs annually, a calamitous drop unmatched elsewhere among the industrialized nations save for Canada. Meanwhile, over this postwar period, the U. S. labor force substantially increased, at an average rate of 1.6 per cent yearly, or almost one million persons annually from 1957 on. In consequence, unemployment hit a peak of seven per cent in 1961. The economic pickup of 1962 and the boom of 1963 temporarily halted this disastrous trend, with the economy producing something more than a million new jobs yearly, or a bit more than the net addition of new matriculants into the labor force. This is only a partial and brief respite because we are on the verge of a spectacular increase in the number of young entrants into the labor force.

Furthermore, productivity per worker increased by about 2.4 per cent yearly before 1961, and since then by more than three per cent annually. We now must create 10,000 new jobs daily, or about ten million in the next two and a half years, just to keep from slipping behind. Another way to say this is to point out that we require 158 new jobs created today for every 100 we needed in the 1950's, simply to stay even.

What is more, and this is at least equally important, the kinds of job opportunities that are being created today (as well as their location) are radically different from what they were only a few years ago, and they are more difficult to anticipate. Notoriously, the unskilled, the young, the old, the immobile poor, and the disadvantaged minorities are not finding job openings. Their plight deepens as the simple tasks they traditionally performed are taken over by machines.

The structuralist argument is pressed further by additional evidence of various types. For example, according to the Labor Department's manpower expert, Seymour Wolfbein, although unemployment hovers at about six per cent the existence of available job openings can be documented. Such evidence, a prerequisite under the Manpower Development and Training Act for establishing training programs for the unemployed in any given area, has not been a limiting factor in setting up training projects. A job survey in Philadelphia, as a typical instance, revealed 15,000 job openings in thirty-two categories for which there were no locally available qualified applicants. Labor bottlenecks of this nature are being reported in various industries and cities across the country.

To date, the structuralists' case has not notably altered the basic position adopted by the Council of Economic Advisers, though there is occasional wavering, or perhaps ambiguity is the better word, in their public utterances. (The Washington scuttlebutt is that, in private, Council members express grave doubts that their policies will reduce unemployment to four per cent.) C.E.A. member Gardner Ackley, in a widely reported speech before the Vermont-New Hampshire School of Banking in Hanover, New Hampshire, recently gave the Council's position as one of still doubting that the pace of new technology was making today's unemployment problem any different from what it had been, and of being convinced that the proposed $11 billion tax cut would suffice to bring unemployment down to four per cent in 1966. As his chief, Walter Heller, has done so often, Ackley went out of his way to spurn the notion that modern automation is significantly new in its impact on the labor market. Once again he made explicit the C.E.A. view that monetary and fiscal manipulations were adequate to the task of controlling unemployment.

The main point at which the structuralists attack the Council of Economic Advisers' position is the latter's implicit assumption of the homogeneity of the labor force. It is a crucial element in the structuralists' argument. They cite, to begin with--and our Swedish uncle Gunnar Myrdal also comes down heavily on this note in his new book, Challenge to Affluence--the high figures for overtime worked by the highly skilled and the managerial elite. Accordingly, a tax-cut stimulated rise in business activity would not absorb any significant portion of the unemployed, they claim, but would produce further bottlenecks by aggravating the shortage of the highly skilled. Indeed, assert the structuralists, should a tax cut create the desired greater investment in new and more productive plant and equipment, it would be certain to enlarge the surplus of underdeveloped (i.e. inadequately educated and trained) manpower, those not equipped for the tasks of designing, installing, and running modern labor-saving machines.

The unreality of the cyclicalists' traditional notion of the homogeneity of labor was pungently emphasized at a recent Washington conference on poverty--they are almost daily affairs now--by John Kenneth Gallbraith. While welcoming efforts to stimulate economic growth, he went on to say: "But on one point there must be no doubt. If the head of a family is stranded deep on the Cumberland plateau, or if he never went to school, or if he has no useful skill, or if his health is broken, or if he succumbed as a youngster to a slum environment, or if opportunity is denied to him because he is a Negro, then he will be poor and his family will be poor and that will be true no matter how opulent everyone else becomes."

Another structuralist, University of Chicago economist Theodore W. Schultz, in his presidential address, "Investment In Human Capital," at the recent annual meeting of the American Economic Association, traced the faulty concept of labor's homogeneity back to the early industrial period. It is a concept that has persisted in the face of more and more conflict with reality. "The failure to treat human resources explicitly as a form of capital, as a produced means of production, as the product of investment, has fostered the retention of the classical notion of labor is a capacity to do manual work requiring little knowledge and skill, a capacity with which, according to this notion, laborers are endowed about equally." "This notion of labor," said Schultz, "was wrong in the classical period and it is patently wrong now. Counting individuals who can and want to work, and treating such a count as a measure of the quantity of an economic factor, is no more meaningful than it would be to count the number of all manner of machines to determine their economic importance either as a stock of capital or as a flow of productive services."

Is the growth in employment in service activities, as employment in production jobs declines, absorbing the hard-core unemployed as hoped? No, say the structuralists. For as Professor Killingsworth testified recently before Senator Joseph D. Clark's Subcommittee on Employment and Manpower, "The fundamental effect of automation on the labor market is to 'twist' the pattern of (the) demand (for labor)"--that is, it pushes down the demand for workers with large amounts of training. The shift from goods to services is a second major factor which twists the labor market in the same way. There are some low-skilled, blue collar jobs in service-producing industries, but the most rapidly growing parts of the service sector are health care and education, both of which require a heavy preponderance of highly-trained people.

Killingsworth is especially critical of the Council of Economic Advisers for its repeated assertion that technological changes today have no worse an influence on employment than in earlier periods. He demonstrates, for example, that automation is in fact creating a new kind of havoc because, quite apart from whatever intrinsic characteristics automation has that differentiate it from earlier technological change, it is occurring in a new economic environment, our highly developed mass consumption society.

When Henry Ford introduced the moving assembly line in 1913, thereby reducing direct labor requirements for each automobile by ninety per cent, the impact on employment was more than compensated for by the fact that there was, in 1913, only one automobile registered for every 100 people in the country. The potential market was tremendous. By the 1950's, however, when a technological change roughly comparable in its labor saving to the assembly line hit Detroit--I refer to the transfer machine which automatically advances the car's engine block and other parts from unfinished to finished form, without employing machine operators--there was one car registered for every four Americans. In short, while the market was not saturated, its growth potential by then was vastly more limited than it was in 1913. By 1960, with one car for every three persons, saturation no longer seemed remote.

The point Killingsworth makes is the simple but ignored one of the increasing inelasticity of demand in the private consumer sector of our advanced economy; that "when an industry has reached maturity--for example, when there is already one car for each three people--it just is not possible to achieve further dramatic increases in sales, even with the largest price cuts within the realm of reason. The improved productivity made possible by labor saving machines simply enables the industry to keep up with the normal growth of the market while employing fewer production workers. This is what happened in a number of our major industries in the 1950's." Items: 99.5 per cent of homes now have electric refrigerators; 93 per cent have TV sets; 83 per cent, electric washing machines.

Sales of electric toothbrushes and electric hairbrushes may be starting to grow rapidly. But the growth of employment in such typical new "industries" will not offset the decline in the older, basic, larger consumer goods industries.

"The doctrine that 'machines make jobs,' to the extent that it rests on research rather than faith," testified Killingsworth before Senator Clark's subcommittee, "is drawn primarily from studies of the periods 1899-1937 and 1899-1953. These were mainly years when the growth potential of most markets for goods was still very great." A "major source of error" is the assumption that our great massproduction industries will grow at the same prodigious rate in the second half of the Twentieth Century as in the first half.

Training Relocation Voc. Ed.

At least three basic policy conclusions are being drawn from all this by manpower experts in Washington. For one, while a tax cut, and especially tax reform, are deemed desirable, they cannot prevail as the answer to hard core unemployment without concomitant "structural" interventions. The latter must include largescale and intensive retraining of the unemployed and underemployed, government underwriting of the costs of their training and relocation, and a vast acceleration and up-dating of vocational education. (Interestingly, 1963 ended with remarkable progress on this front: Congressional passage of an extraordinarily ambitious education bill carrying increased funds for vocational education, as well as substantial expansion and improvement of the Manpower Development and Training Act program, with the latter to include not only money for relocation but also stepped-up programs to combat illiteracy.)

Expansion of Pub. Sector

Secondly, because inelasticity of demand characterizes so much of our private consumer economy, there must be recognition that America's predominant unmet needs are found in the public sector. At present these needs cannot be expressed as "market demand" since the requisite purchasing power is lacking. Among the beneficiaries of housing programs, of more and better schools, better mass transportation, health care, and recreational facilities, are the thirty million poor whose needs can be converted to demand only by direct Federal subsidy. What will be involved in changing the poor into paying customers is a program of public works on a much larger scale, especially in such areas of sustained economic torpor as Appalachia, the upper Great Lakes Region, and parts of the Ohio Valley region.

Construction

The argument also is being pressed that the single expedient promising the speediest result would be a massive national urban redevelopment program, desirable both in coping with the deteriorated areas of our largest cities and because construction, and especially housing, uses a higher ratio of labor to materials than our other big industries.

The third conclusion is that there must be a revolution in our labor market policies, resulting in what Charles Killingsworth, Gunnar Myrdal, Professor C. W. Bakke of Yale, and other structuralists call a "positive" labor market policy. Besides the retraining, vocational education, and relocation allowances, there must be a vastly improved national employment service to assist labor mobility at all levels. Today, the U.S. Employment Service is Federally financed but run by the states. Its operations are locally oriented and its offices stigmatized as "unemployment offices" rather than centers for employment.

A reformed U.S.E.S. would provide up-to-the-minute regional and national employment trends information in all its 1,900 offices; expert interviewing, testing, counseling, and placement services for all skill levels; and a real source of information on job openings. The latter could be achieved by making it compulsory for larger firms to list openings with the U.S.E.S. (but with no compulsion that firms have to hire only applicants referred by the U.S.E.S.). If the current cutbacks in armament programs increase, the likelihood of such reforms will be enhanced because only a first rate, national employment service can deal effectively with sudden major manpower dislocations.

In sum, then, such American economic malaise as prevails will not be cured by the Council of Economic Advisers' monetary or fiscal measures unless accompanied by significantly substantial government intervention of a structural nature. That means vastly stepped-up retraining and relocation of the unemployed; public works in the area of such unmet needs as housing, education, health care, urban mass transportation, and recreation; and an expanded, reformed national employment service dedicated to a positive labor market policy. Nothing less will suffice.

PLANNING SESSION
for the
WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Washington Hilton Hotel
November 16-17-18, 1965

This agenda paper was prepared by the author to stimulate discussion of the work group. It does not represent any policy determination of the White House Conference, and is not a final statement of the issues. The agenda outline suggested by the author is a starting point for discussion and subject to consideration and revision by the work group participants themselves.

AGENDA PAPER #I
JOBS, JOB TRAINING AND ECONOMIC SECURITY
Dr. V. W. Henderson

Proposed Agenda

I. Questions and Issues on National Economic Policies

Inquiry into national economic policies -- fiscal, monetary, manpower, employment, and area development -- should permeate the discussion session on Jobs, Job Training and Economic Security. Policies in these areas are of special significance to Negro workers and income recipients. Policy implies more than the existence of programs and practices which have some impact on the problem at hand. A policy requires the explicit recognition of goals and the formulation of a coherent program for realization of those goals. Important implications for the employment and economic situation of Negroes are associated with alternative economic policies and program approaches. Some of the questions and issues to which the two-day discussions should be addressed follow:

A. Would achievement of full employment be sufficient to alleviate significantly the range of employment problems which currently handicap Negroes?

1. What gains in employment and economic opportunities can Negroes expect if we achieve the "interim goal" of 4 per cent unemployment?

2. What structural deficiencies in the Negro labor force can be attacked through national economic policies? What policies and programs should be pursued to get at these deficiencies?

3. What is the role of job creation programs, both in and outside the Negro ghetto, in meeting the employment and income problems of Negroes?

4. What are the alternative approaches to job creation programs that will reach Negro members of the working-age population and utilize present skills while providing for the development of new ones?

B. What role should tax policies play in accelerating achievement of racial equality in economic outcomes and results?

C. Will national economic policy, oriented toward stimulating aggregate demand, get to the root problems of low per capita incomes among Negroes?

D. How may social needs be converted into jobs, and what are the alternative approaches?

1. What can be done through public policy and private action to marshal idle Negro manpower in an attack on accumulating unmet public needs?

2. About 8 million Negroes, 40 per cent of the nation's Negro population, live in 70 cities. What policies and programs should be concentrated on these cities to reach Negro workers with comprehensive programs to improve their economic situation?

3. What priority should be given to public works program and work projects in an attack on Negro employment problems and in developing Negro human resources?

4. Should a special program of direct employment be undertaken in the more distressed Negro communities that will permit the unemployed as well as those not in the labor force to work on projects which will alleviate physical deficiencies in their own environments?

E. How can private enterprise be more effective in generating human resources development and use among Negroes?

1. What incentives can be provided through public policy to encourage private employers to increase programs in Negro human resource development?

2. What incentives can be provided through job policy to encourage employers to apply some of the gains from increased productivity to measures aimed at easing human resource adjustments in the labor market?

II. Profile of the Negro Labor Force

The exploration of the profile of the Negro labor force should focus on an inventory of present and future skill resources and their allocation in the economy. The discussion of these questions should form the basis for prescribing future action.

A. The Employed Worker

1. In what significant ways do the characteristics of employed Negroes differ from the characteristics of employed whites with respect to wages and salaries, occupations, industry attachment, educational attainment, minimum wage coverage, unemployment insurance coverage, union membership, etc.

2. To what extent are already existing skills in the Negro community not being utilized in the job market? What job categories, if expanded, could be readily filled by qualified Negroes?

3. What skills are available in the Negro community for new kinds of jobs which the Government could stimulate, e.g., nonprofessional jobs in the human services (health, education, welfare, recreation, community organization, etc.)?

4. To what extent are workers in low status jobs screened from promotable skills?

5. To what extent is the reservoir of existing skills affected by technological change?

6. To what extent are Negroes in the labor force outside the structure of laws designed to protect the working man?

7. What incentives and subsidy programs would best encourage industries to locate in the vicinity of the Negro labor force?

B. The Underemployed Worker

1. What barriers in the traditional corporate setting restrain the Negro worker from full realization of his potential?

2. How can underemployed Negroes be identified, and the degree of their underemployment ascertained in terms of actual and potential qualifications? What should be done to reduce underemployment among Negroes?

3. To what extent are Negroes economically underemployed in comparison to whites when both groups are standardized with respect to age, educational attainment, participation in the labor force, and sex?

C. The Unemployed Worker

1. In what significant ways do the characteristics of the Negro unemployed differ from the characteristics of the white unemployed with respect to labor force experience, age, educational attainment and skills, previous occupation, industry attachment?

2. To what extent is unemployment among Negro workers connected with technological change and shifts in manpower requirements, seasonal factors, inadequate growth, frictional factors, geographic and occupational immobility, racial discrimination in employment as such, other forms of racial discrimination?

3. How can we best improve assistance to the long-term unemployed?

D. Those Not in the Labor Force

1. Why have many of the long-term unemployed withdrawn from labor force participation and are reluctant to enter again?

2. What programs are needed to reach the prime-age Negro males with low labor force participation?

3. What special efforts are required to extend and improve the public employment services?

E. The Rural Worker

Panelists may want to consider and evaluate --

1. The current loan programs that are administered by the Farmers Home Administration, with special reference to the E O Loans, Title III.

2. The new farm program as it applies to non-commercial agriculture, which includes 99 per cent of the Negro farm operators.

3. The lack of a national farm labor policy, with special reference to hired farm labor, including migrants.

4. The organization and institutional services and programs provided by Federal, state, and local governments to the rural workers.

5. The extension of minimum wage and other provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and collective bargaining rights under the Taft-Hartley Bill to hired farm workers.

III. New Programs and Attitudes

A. Since employability in our economy, particularly in recent years, is related to skills and work-experience, what are the training and re-training programs, existing or proposed, that are relevant for employed and unemployed Negro workers and youth?

1. Apprenticeship programs

a) What are the current practices of unions, construction contractors and their association and industry with regard to Negro workers and youth?

b) What is the role of public vocational schools and government agencies such as Employment Service and Bureau of Apprenticeship and Training in this area? What, if any, modifications and improvements are needed?

c) What is the relationship of city, state and Federal government to apprenticeship training, especially in regard to public construction and licensing activities?

d) To what extent should policy move from reliance on qualifications alone to facilitate integration in the apprenticeable trades?

2. On-the-Job Training

a) To what extent is training emphasized as opposed to hiring workers with skills previously acquired?

b) Can on-the-job training be utilized effectively in public and private institutions such as schools, hospitals, recreation facilities and welfare agencies to:

1) Provide needed additional manpower?

2) Free professionals to concentrate on professional tasks by greater utilization of non-professionals from group to be served?

3. Other Programs

a) How effective are the present government-supported training programs?

b) To what extent should institutions concentrate on training Negro applicants to hurdle existing qualification barriers (testing, etc.) and to what extent should there be emphasis on the changing of those qualifications (FSEE, AFQT, employment tests, apprenticeship examinations)?

4. The Overall Role of the United States Employment Service

a) Should its mandate be updated in view of increased emphasis on skills in labor market and growing labor force?

b) What is its relationship to other channels of employment and other institutions which implement manpower and education policy?

c) How can its operation be made more efficient?

d) Are its services adequate for older workers, members of minority groups and workers with limited education and low-level and obsolete skills, especially in service occupations?

B. How can greater economic stability be developed among under-employed and unemployed Negro workers by changing the social definition of jobs, the requirements for entrance into them, particularly in the service-producing industries and occupations such as health, education, recreation and welfare?

1. Can and should "non-professionals" be introduced as paid workers into public and private institutions in this area as teacher aides, psychiatric aides, research aides, block workers and community organizers with realistic training programs to encourage effective participation and promotion?

2. Should coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act be broadened, and the minimum wage be raised? If so, in what industries in particular?

3. Should collective bargaining rights be extended to these occupations and industries?

C. The Negro Entrepreneur

1. To what extent should government resources be devoted to the encouragement of a class of small businessmen in the Negro community?

2. How can Negro businessmen be drawn into the mainstream of American commerce?

3. What new institutional arrangements, banking, etc., are necessary to provide the proper climate for increased entry into the entrepreneurial class?

IV. Enforcement of Equal Employment Opportunities

A. Title VII

1. What has been the experience since the July 2, 1965 effective date?

2. How can the most effective cooperation be achieved between the Federal, state, and local fair employment commissions in fulfilling the objectives of Title VII?

3. Should the Commission be supplied with firmer adjudicatory powers in addition to mediation and conciliation functions?

4. What other improvements might assist the Commission in achieving the statutory objectives?

B. Federal Contract Compliance Program

1. How can the use of the Federal spending power through Federal contracts be more adequately used to further equal employment practices in many industries?

2. Has the "affirmative action" provision of the Executive Order and the Plans for Progress program made a substantial impact on minority employment?

C. Government as the Employer, Federal, State and Local

1. What changes have occurred regarding the equal employment opportunities of minority group employees on the Federal level?

2. Is the Federal government doing all that it requires of private enterprise in terms of affirmative action, such as in-service training, etc?

3. What improvements can be suggested in order to further the program of fair employment practices among the state and local governments?

D. In achieving equal opportunity, would the resources of the government be better harnessed by a different allocation of responsibilities among the agencies?

V. Barriers to Upward Mobility and Equal Employment

A. What new techniques should be developed to deal with tokenism, concentration of minority groups in low wage jobs and lack of in-service training for upward mobility?

B. How can the techniques used by some unions to perpetuate discriminatory employment practices be broken down?

1. Revision of labor-management agreements employing segregated lines of progression and discriminatory uses of seniority provisions?

2. Consolidation of segregated locals without further disadvantage to members of the minority local?

C. What new laws or techniques are needed to cope with private groups and individuals who perpetuate discriminatory practices in employment through economic and political influence?

D. What "Affirmative Action Programs" should industry, unions and private organizations develop in order to create greater opportunities for Negroes?

PLANNING SESSION
FOR
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

JOBS, JOB TRAINING, AND ECONOMIC SECURITY - PRELIMINARY REPORT

December 3, 1965

MEMORANDUM TO LEE C. WHITE

From: Carl Holman
Berl Bernhard
Harold Fleming

Following is a preliminary report on proposals by the panel on Jobs, Job Training, and Economic Security of the Planning Session for the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights." It is based on a report by the director of the committee for the panel, Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, President of Clark College. A final report, based on a thorough study of the transcripts of the two days of meetings, will be submitted to the President by the end of the year. However, because of the seriousness of the problems which the Planning Session discussed, and the sense of urgency of the conferees, we are bringing these preliminary findings to your attention now. They are not all-inclusive; only after a more intensive study of the transcripts can we guarantee that every single suggestion made during the course of the two days comes to the President's attention. Such a study is now underway, and will be embodied in our final report.

This report is in two parts. First is a summary statement of consensus on a comprehensive approach to Negro worker problems. The second part sets forth specific approaches to components of the problem; all of these specific suggestions were strongly supported by the majority of the panelists.

I

General agreement was reached that job problems encountered by Negroes are beyond the point that continued piecemeal approaches will be effective in alleviating them. While a full employment economy is essential to furthering job opportunities, even a full employment economy -- i.e., 3 percent unemployment -- will have, at best, very limited effect on the unemployed and underemployed Negro workers.

To reach the large numbers of Negroes who need jobs and job training, politics and programs beyond those directed toward achievement of full employment, as well as beyond present training and retraining programs, are needed.

A comprehensive program directed to specific targets in urban centers, the Negro ghettos, and rural areas where the Negro population is heavily concentrated, is needed. It cannot be assumed that aggregate programs will reach the masses of Negroes who need to benefit from such programs. Several concepts and names were given to the comprehensive approach: the development of a "freedom budget";"a national economic development budget for equal rights": "a job budget," "a capital and manpower budget." Regardless of nomenclature, there was general consensus that a structured program to reach in a highly systematic fashion the unreached masses of Negroes with new opportunities for jobs and training is essential to the mission of "fulfilling these rights."

1. To this end the panel called for a large-scale structuring of employment opportunities, and simultaneously a large-scale structuring of job training for Negro workers.
2. The panel strongly suggested the implementation of public programs to create jobs to absorb Negro workers utilizing present skills while affording opportunity for the development of new skills. The thrust of discussion on this point was that social and human needs presently existing in this society can be converted into jobs and thereby create new opportunities for jobs and job training for Negro workers. In attacking the problem social as well as physical reforms can be achieved. Occupations can be upgraded, re-defined and re-engineered.

a) Specific goals and targets should be established and aimed at the areas in which the bulk of unemployed and underemployed Negro workers are concentrated -- the 70-odd cities where urban Negroes are concentrated and specific rural areas in the 5 or 6 Southern states where Negro rural populations are concentrated.

b) A time-table should be developed. Mr. Randolph suggested 10 years. It should involve no more than 10 years. Goals with supporting policies and programs should be set. Accomplishments should be measurable and identified according to census tracts, neighborhoods and specific areas.

c) Data on Negro unemployment and underemployment must be systematically related directly to blocks, census tracts, neighborhoods and to sub-groups of the Negro working age population. Skill inventories must be developed and related to programs to structure new opportunities. This is necessary in order for targets and goals to be established.

d) Targets, goals and plans should include private businesses:

1) Private efforts should be directed toward fuller use of Negro workers at their present skill levels while implementing training programs and plant and business location schemes to reach Negroes in target areas.

2) Gains from increases in productivity should be re-invested in structured job expansion programs and structured job training programs.

3) Incentives for private business to encourage fuller use and development of Negro manpower should be developed. Direct subsidies to create jobs for Negroes, and tax policy, can be effective in this respect. Many jobs could be re-tailored for effective absorption of Negro workers at present skill levels.

e) Government contracts with private business should play a large role in the development of targets and goals, and the implementation of job expansion programs and job training programs for Negro workers.

II

Job Expansion

1. The panel concluded that in order to reduce Negro unemployment and underemployment to a socially tolerable level, the total number of jobs in our economy will have to be expanded, and that in order to accomplish such an expansion, federal action will be required.

2. This consensus was reached because of the following developments which will militate against a reduction of Negro unemployment and underemployment to a tolerable level without government intervention:

a) The inflationary pressures likely to arise if reliance is placed on financial and monetary policies alone to drive the unemployment rate below 4 percent.

b) The continuing rapid rate of technological change with its consequent diminution in the number of unskilled and semi-skilled jobs, the usual portals of entry for many non-college trained youth.

c) The differentially high rate of unemployment among Negroes, particularly for Negro youth and the heavy influx of Negro youth into the labor force which can be expected in the years immediately ahead.

3. The tightening of the labor market by direct employment expansion was considered a necessary prerequisite for many of the recommendations that follow. Full employment for whites and Negroes -- including the substantial elimination of underemployment -- was held to be the primary target of governmental effort.

4. To accomplish this end: since there are a great many unfilled human and social needs -- including, as Mr. Randolph stressed, the desirability of destroying the ghettos in our cities -- government should establish priority goals and put idle labor to work.

5. Reference was made to the desirability of the U. S. Government's developing a capital and manpower budget, with sufficient forward planning to facilitate the full utilization of the human resources potential in socially useful employment.

6. In this, as in other governmental programs outlined below, it is essential that special care be taken to assure that those who need jobs are the ones who receive them.

Income

7. Secondary only to the need for an adequate total number of jobs is the necessity of assuring that all citizens engaged in useful work earn a livelihood that will enable them to keep themselves and their dependents at least above the poverty level. To this end, it was recommended that:

a) Millions of workers in agriculture and non-agricultural blue-collar employment now excluded from coverage under the Fair Labor Standards Act be brought under coverage forthwith.

b) The minimum wage be raised in a series of steps, but as rapidly as possible, until the minimum hourly wage becomes $2.

c) The legislation governing trade unions be amended to facilitate their organizing the unorganized.

d) The exclusion of employees of government and nonprofit institutions from minimum wage protection and from the right to unionize be removed.

Elimination of Discrimination

8. In addition to increasing the total number of jobs it is essential that the opportunities of Negroes to share in the jobs that are available be widened through the following actions:

a) More effective enforcement of legislative and administrative regulations currently in force by the provision of adequate budgets and personnel for the appropriate agencies.

1) The present thrust of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act is largely oriented toward individual complaints. An attack through public policy and legislation upon patterns of racial discrimination in employment was suggested.

2) Voluntary compliance and efforts are accomplishing very little insofar as the masses of Negroes are concerned. Tokenism involving the Negro elite is insufficient. Sanctions need to be strengthened.

b) Amendment of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act to enable the Commission to issue cease and desist orders, and to take more initiating and affirmative action rather than to be largely confined to acting on complaints.

c) Assessment of whether under Executive Order 11114, covering non-discrimination in public construction, contractors' agreements with the government not to discriminate should have priority over contractors' collective bargaining agreements with labor.

d) Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act is insufficient to deal with employment discrimination in local and state governments. An attack upon racial discrimination in employment in local and state governments through Federal policy is needed.

e) Closer coordination of federal agencies engaged in the various aspects of civil rights.

f) The establishment of performance criteria so that the extent of compliance can be measured and tokenism avoided.

Private Efforts

9. In addition to the foregoing recommendations aimed at strengthening the Federal Government machinery, it is highly desirable that non-governmental efforts also be strengthened so that discriminatory practices in employment can be reduced and eliminated as quickly as possible. Among the steps to be taken by non-governmental groups are:

a) Strong commitments by employer groups and individual employers to encourage them to take a wide range of affirmative action, such as the realistic adjustment of testing and hiring standards; special efforts to upgrade employees with limited skills and background; re-engineering of jobs, including the breakdown of complex jobs to facilitate the hiring of workers with limited skills, etc.

b) Continuing efforts on the part of trade union organizations to remove barriers to apprenticeships, employment, upgrading of members of minority groups.

c) Action by community leaders to establish, strengthen and make more effective local and state equal employment opportunity councils.

d) Adoption and expansion by nonprofit organizations of equal employment opportunity practices in all of their economic activities.

10. It is essential that the community understands the relation between the reduction and elimination of discrimination in employment and in housing and education. In this connection we must consider the multiple ways in which intra- and interurban transportation can be strengthened to assure that minority workers have easier access, through reasonable transportation charges, to jobs.

Education and Training

11. With respect to education and training the following steps should be taken while major efforts are made to speed desegregation:

a) To improve the quality of schools in de facto segregated areas.

b) To assure access of minority group members to the full range of all publicly supported facilities.

c) To rapidly expand the number and quality of junior or community colleges which should provide a wide range of courses, including those to assist members of minority groups to improve their occupational mobility.

12. To encourage management and labor through the use of new incentives, including possibly the use of tax credits, to broaden and deepen in-plant and plant-associated education and training.

The Federal Government should give special consideration to making use of its contracting power to insure improved training opportunities.

13. With respect to current federal training programs, particularly the Manpower Development and Training Act, the following is recommended:

a) A large-scale expansion of MDTA and a conscious effort to bring Negroes in large numbers into such programs.

b) To disseminate information about the availability of training opportunities so that those most in need of these opportunities can learn about them.

c) To place additional stress on on-the-job training, thereby linking training more closely with employment.

d) Many programs rely in the first instance on local initiative, and it is to the advantage of certain local leaders to prevent low-wage employees in their community from securing training. The Federal Government must be alert to the necessity of filling the gaps by establishing programs on its own initiative.

U. S. Employment Service

14. Significant gains for minority group members in training and employment depend on a major strengthening of the U. S. Employment Service. To this end it is recommended that:

a) Early action be taken to establish a much higher degree of federal leadership of the Employment Service, including the setting of national standards as a second-best answer to the federalization of the system.

b) The system be upgraded through better staffing, training, etc.

c) The Federal Government act more aggressively to assure that the Service acts in a non-discriminatory manner.

d) The scale and scope of the Service be broadened to assure that all people, including minority groups in rural areas, have access to it.

e) These recommendations can be facilitated by placing personnel under state merit systems, by re-allocating federal funds in order to make special efforts to help minority group members, and by placing additional funds at the disposal of employment officers so that they can help defray the transportation costs of workers in search of jobs in other cities.

Unemployment Insurance

15. With respect to unemployment insurance, the Panel emphasized the importance of extending coverage, but it also advocated the establishment of a higher average minimum payment as well as federal action aimed at preventing employers with seasonal workers from following hiring and firing patterns which deprive their workers of much needed benefits.

Entrepreneurship

16. With regard to encouraging more Negroes to become entrepreneurs, the Panel took the following positions:

a) An enlarged Negro entrepreneur group is desirable because, among other reasons, its disproportionately small participation in such an important occupation in our economy helps perpetuate its tangential relation to the economy.

b) To open up opportunities for increased participation on a significant scale would require substantial federal financial assistance in the form of loans, guarantees, etc., as well as technical assistance. On the latter score, private and nonprofit organizations also have a significant contribution to make.

c) It would be particularly desirable for large and small franchise companies and others operating on an agency basis to intensify their efforts to find suitable Negro personnel to staff their outlets.

d) As far as possible, Negro businesses and businessmen should be helped to locate not only in the heart of the ghetto but on the periphery or outside so that Negro businessmen can more speedily be integrated into the mainstream of American commerce.

e) It is not necessary to think of Negro entrepreneurship as an exclusively Negro activity; joint ventures involving Negroes and whites should be encouraged.

Rural Negroes

17. Despite the heavy migration of Negroes from the rural areas of the South it was noted that:

a) Many are still living in these areas, and a high proportion remain in conditions of poverty or abject poverty.

b) The plight of these people has been increased by the many policies pursued by the Federal Government to assist agriculture without giving due consideration for the special needs and difficulties of sharecroppers, tenant farmers, and small farm owners.

c) There are a great many ways in which federal policy could and should be reshaped to give the Negro farm family a better chance of surviving on the land if it desires to remain there, and to help others to a better opportunity to shift to the city if that is their preference or becomes their only alternative.

d) While many white farm families have been able to raise their income substantially by securing additional employment in the new manufacturing plants locating in rural areas in the South, the continuing discrimination against Negroes in industrial employment have kept them at or below poverty levels.

e) In addition to moving aggressively to eliminate discrimination in the rural South, the Federal Government should explore whether it can stimulate employment of Negroes who live on rural, Southern farms so that more of them can continue to live where they are rather than flooding the cities which are ill prepared to receive them.

f) However, since many will continue to move to the cities, it is essential that more efforts be made by governmental and non-governmental agencies to provide a range of services which will speed their integration into the urban economy. Among the most important steps is to assure that they have an opportunity to acquire basic literacy and marketable skill.

18. While the problem of the full absorption of the Negro into American life has assumed national proportions, there remain important regional aspects to the problem:

a) Half of the Negro population continues to live in the South, where discrimination continues to be most intense.

b) The South continues to be an area characterized by an unskilled labor surplus which intensifies the difficulties that Negroes face in being absorbed into the economy.

c) Negro farm laborers in the South are in the most deprived sector of the entire American population.

d) Because of these regional aspects, the fashioning of constructive programs must always be tested against the needs of Negroes living in rural areas, small Southern communities, or large urban centers in the South, as well as those in the large ghettos of Northern and Western cities.

Representation Data

19. Because of the increasingly important role that government policy plays in determining the economic status of the Negro minority and because of the long-term exclusion of the Negro from most decision-making apparatus, it is important that every effort be made to secure Negro representation on all programs involving access to jobs, income, or other types of assistance.

20. In order to keep a closer check on results, consideration should be given by the civil rights organizations to their long-term position against the collection of data by race. It may well be that the risks of collecting such data today are less serious than the costs of not having such data available.

21. Further, it is essential that the Government establish sound bases for data collection to assess the extent to which the Negro minority is benefiting from federal programs, and to make such information available.

Taxes

22. Since many of the actions advocated above involve large expenditures of federal funds, it is important in the drafting of such legislation that special care be taken not to rely on taxes that have a regressive quality. Otherwise, workers just above the poverty line will be paying for many of the programs established for those just below the poverty line.

Goals

23. The inherently complex nature of the recommendations outlined above which are aimed at providing an adequate number of satisfactory jobs for all Americans, including Negro Americans, makes it essential that targets be set against which to measure progress. The urgency of the situation is such that much must be accomplished in the immediate future position, and more shortly thereafter. The American economy and democracy will forfeit security and progress if a substantial proportion of Negroes remain unemployed or underemployed.

Program Proposals for Manpower Policy

THE GOVERNMENT'S EFFORTS in national manpower policy have been marked by a commendable willingness to experiment with techniques to aid those workers who are not well served by normal market processes. Nevertheless, in demonstrating this capacity to innovate, the Government programs generally have failed to develop substantial links between training activities and employer requirements in the dominant sectors of the labor market.

The answer seems to lie in the expansion of on-the-job training. There is persuasive evidence that under appropriate economic conditions both employers and jobseekers are willing to make considerable investment in such training. In fact, most workers have acquired their skills through this route. Even many of the glamour jobs, from programer to instrument man, have been filled by training within the firm rather than long periods spent dissecting a computer.

Clearly, the most powerful stimulus for such training is continued full employment. Thus far, political factors arising from a fear of inflation have prevented a concerted attack on unemployment through an increase in aggregate demand.

Existing Deficiencies

The problem resolves itself into one of establishing a set of incentives for the employer. Several options are available, including direct subsidies to employers, a tax credit on "investment" in training, a tax rebate system for firms who set up their own training programs, and an exemption from increases in the minimum wage as applied to employees under 21 years of age. Each of these proposals has its shortcomings and pitfalls. The most general objection is that employers would reap a windfall by doing what they would do anyway in the absence of a special inducement. Even this objection may be satisfied, however, if a quid pro quo is exacted in the form of standards governing the kinds of programs and, most important, the characteristics of the persons who are encompassed by the training effort.

The second major deficiency of current manpower policies relates to labor market information. Various Government agencies have taken measures to improve this information, but it is still inadequate to the needs of an effective manpower policy.

A distinction can be made between "extensive" and "intensive" labor market information. "Extensive" information deals with knowledge concerning availability and general attributes of employment opportunities and jobseekers. The "intensive" information will provide to the jobseeker some assessment of working conditions, quality of supervision, and related matters; the employer will be interested in the sobriety of the applicants, their specific work experience, and a variety of factors that go into an assessment of quality. Undoubtedly, there are great economies of scale to be realized in the collection of "extensive" information. However, if there are any economies to be reaped in the collection of "intensive" information they probably arise from specialization with respect to particular occupations or industries.

The public employment service has been effective as a placement agency in those labor markets where "extensive" information is most important, such as the market for farm workers and day laborers. On the other hand, many specialty agencies have emerged to collect "intensive" information for particular markets involving executives, engineers, and other professionals for which screening is a vital part of the preemployment process. Another source of "intensive" information would be friends and other employees.

Suggested Improvements

Under these circumstances, it is appropriate that Government agencies, like the employment service, should concentrate on the comprehensive collection of "extensive" labor market information, focusing on both current conditions and long-range trends. The public agency should incorporate this information in its own placement activities and insure its widest possible dissemination among potential users. The distribution of "extensive" information is especially important among those jobseekers who interact with other unemployed persons and thus are denied the benefits of effective informal channels.

A gap still remains in this assignment of functions. Some jobseekers, particularly new entrants to the labor market and displaced workers, require systematic information about their own aptitudes and interests and the characteristics of the markets which they might enter. Intensive counseling as a source of "personal" information should be a major component of Government manpower policies. Some steps already have been taken in this direction, but within the employment service at least, it is difficult to expect that quality services will be provided by a counselor who receives $6,000 per year and who occupies just another desk in the local office.

The policy suggestions forwarded here are based on the tentative judgment that Government manpower programs to date have not had a significant impact on the unemployed or the labor market. Although it is desirable to preserve a responsiveness to immediate circumstances, greater progress may be made in the long run through the judicious use of economic incentives and the development of effective systems of labor market information. The main challenge to manpower policies is to devise programs that will improve and supplement existing institutions, rather than to create arrangements that will make manpower policies an end in their own right.

—Arnold R. Weber
University of Chicago
Graduate School of Business

A rational economist must finally be concerned with how well people live, not with what things cost. In measuring the wealth of society, it is absurd to rely entirely on the Gross National Product, for much of it may be worse than useless. It is important to notice how much the various expensive products and services of corporations and government make people subject to repairmen, fees, commuting, queues, unnecessary work, dressing just for the job; and these things prevent satisfaction altogether.

—Paul Goodman, People or Personnel.

T-R to Mr. Law — 57 to Col McKenzie

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

Info Contact Mrs Joyce Bierman 343-4670

Emory F. Via
Director, Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Ga.

March 25, 1966

MEETING
Task Force on Employment, Training & Welfare
Room 301 - 1901 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.

Dr. Vivian Henderson, Chairman
President
Clark College
Atlanta, Georgia

Rev. Walter Fauntroy
Vice-Chairman, Conference
Director, Washington Chapter
Southern Christian Leadership Conference
New Bethel Baptist Church
812 S Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Ellen J. Perkins
Bureau of Family Services
Department of Health, Education & Welfare
Washington, D. C.

Dr. Helen Nicol (Staff)
Office of the Commissioner
Welfare Administration
Department of Health, Education & Welfare
Washington, D. C.

Dr. T. T. Williams
Southern University
Department of Agricultural Economics
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

William Mirengoff (Staff)
Deputy Director, Office of Manpower Policy, Evaluation, and Research
Manpower Administration
Department of Labor
Washington, D. C.

Eli Ginsberg
Purgear

Frank Armstrong
Industrial Relations Counselors Service, Inc.
New York, New York

Woodrow Ginsburg
Industrial Union Department
AFL-CIO
Washington, D. C.

Craig W. Christenson
Executive Assistant to the Chairman
Chicago Northwestern Railway
Chicago, Illinois

Hal Sheppard
W. E. Upjohn Institute
15th & L Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Albert Shostack (Staff)
Office of Manpower and Training
Department of Labor
14th & Constitution
Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Dorothy Newman (Staff)
Assistant Economic Consultant, Bureau of Labor Statistics
Department of Labor
14th & Constitution, N. W.
Washington, D. C.

Col. Norman J. McKenzie
Administrative Officer
White House Conference on Civil Rights
1800 G Street, N.W.
Room 1121
Washington, D. C.

Charles Hawkins
HEW

[Raymond Scruggs
Pub Rels Mgr, AT&T]

Please add the following name to the meeting list of March 25, 1966

Dr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

March 28, 1966

MEMBERS

TASK FORCE ON ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

Dr. Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman

President
Clark College
240 Chestnut Street, S.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30314

Mr. Frank G. Armstrong
Vice President
Industrial Relations Counselors
Service, Inc.
1270 Avenue of the Americas
New York, New York 10020

Mr. Woodrow Ginsburg
Director of Research
Industrial Union Department
AFL-CIO
815 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20006

Mr. Eli Ginzberg
Professor of Economics
Columbia University
116th and Broadway
New York, New York

Dr. Hylan Lewis
Professor of Sociology
Howard University
2400 Sixth Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. Mahlon Tasker Puryear
Deputy Director
National Urban League
14 East 48th Street
New York, New York

Mr. Raymond Scruggs
Public Relations Manager
American Telephone & Telegraph Company
195 Broadway
New York, New York

Mr. Hal Sheppard
W. E. Upjohn Institute
15th and L Streets, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
Director, Labor Program
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

Dr. T. T. Williams
Department of Agricultural Economics
Southern University
Baton Rouge, Louisiana

March 28, 1966

STAFF MEMBERS

TASK FORCE ON ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

Mr. William Mirengoff
Staff Director

Deputy Director, Office of Manpower
Policy, Evaluation, and Research
Manpower Administration
Department of Labor
14th and Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Dr. Albert Shostack
Assistant Director

Office of Manpower and Training
Department of Labor
14th and Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Mr. William Gary
Director of Civil Rights and Minority Affairs
International Union of Electrical,
Radio and Machine Workers
1126 Sixteenth Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Mrs. Dorothy Newman
Assistant Economic Consultant,
Bureau of Labor Statistics
Department of Labor
14th and Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

Ellen J. Perkins
Bureau of Family Services
Welfare Administration
Health, Education and Welfare
Washington, D. C.

Miss Phyllis Wallace
Acting Chief, Technical Studies
Equal Employment Opportunity Commission
1800 G Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C.

WHC

April 8, 1966

Memorandum on Policy and Program to End Poverty in Rural America

NOTE: The Board of Directors of the National Sharecroppers Fund at its February, 1966, meeting heard a presentation of the needs and potentialities of rural areas by a government agricultural expert. After discussion by Board members about the relative public and private investment required; how to avoid poverty-scale living; how areas could be developed without the entrance of industry; and problems of uneconomic farming; the following statement of problems and policies was evolved.

In twentieth century America, rural and urban society are rapidly becoming one in people, economy, and development.

In rural America, with a population of 55.4 million, 600,000 young people annually are seeking work both on and off the farms. But at present no new job opportunities are being created in the rural areas. Adding to these young people the others who are displaced by continuing advances in agricultural technology, the result is a forced migration of about a million people annually out of the rural areas.

The current Mississippi crisis, with evicted families sleeping-in in government facilities in Mississippi and camping-in in Washington to dramatize their plea for aid, is only one indication of a continuing dilemma. For every 1,000 acres of cotton that is mechanized and weeded with chemicals, a "surplus" of 50 rural families is created. Cotton in the southeastern states is presently 60 per cent modernized and may reach 90 per cent this year. Furthermore, the old South is expected to lose one-third of its cotton acreage base because of market conditions and competition from Arizona, Texas and California. Within 10 years, the by-product will be more than 300,000 "surplus" families in 16 Southern states. When the whole rural economy is considered, this process will send 45 million displaced "surplus" people to the cities in the next few decades. An additional three million families may be forced out of farming and other rural employment because of the deterioration of the rural economy over the same period.

Most of the migrating people are poor. In fact, almost half of the nation's people who live below the poverty level are in rural areas, yet they are receiving less assistance from the anti-poverty program than other parts of the country; only about 10 per cent of OEO funds are thus far spent in rural areas. Thus, without help to climb out of poverty where they are, the rural poor move to the cities and, unskilled and ill-educated, swell the ranks of the urban poor. They move into already crowded ghettos, increasing existing tension, raising social and financial costs, and bringing civil disorder nearer.

Urban poverty cannot be ended until poverty is ended at its source, the blighted countryside.

This is not essentially a race problem. More than two-thirds of the displaced families will be white, the rest Negro. But the Negroes are usually forced out first because centuries of deprivation and discrimination have made their hold on land, jobs and homes so marginal.

Meanwhile, the over-all national population increase in the next 35 years will be about 150 million people. Our 210 cities cannot hold them. An expansion of the rural economy to support rural population increase, plus a merging of the urban society into the rural sector, is necessary for accommodation of the expected new millions. There is at present no evidence of adequate long- or short-range planning for the social and economic adjustments necessitated by this population expansion and migration.

The rural problem, most crucially evident in the destitution of rural people, is actually a problem of all American society because an inability to revitalize the rural economy will paralyze necessary expansion of the entire economy. A policy of drift that assumes, for instance, a doubling of New York's population from 10 to 20 million without any plans for meeting the situation is incompatible with American social and political objectives and aspirations and, indeed, with the survival of democracy itself.

An important political aspect of the population shift is an expected attrition of farm voting base to only one per cent in 1980. It has already dropped from 18 per cent in 1945 to six per cent in 1966. This means a comparable shift of political and legislative responsibility to urban people who must now understand and write both farm and rural legislation. Considering the potential saving of excessive welfare costs, urban redevelopment costs, and tax losses from people with no income, urban people have a vital interest in developing an expanding economic base for people in rural areas.

The search for realistic public policies to meet the crisis depends first on rejection of the ideas that (a) drifting will solve the problem; (b) the problem cannot be solved; or (c) that 1930-65 policies and public programs may suffice. Whoever offers programs adequate for expansion of the total economy, rural and urban, and to serve the basic needs of the people, should win the elections from 1968 to 2000. The effective political force behind these ideas must be city-based, but supplemented by creative rural leadership and the dynamics of the civil rights movement in America.

Significant components of such a program for American rural development should include:

1. Construction of one million new rural houses and the major repair of $2\frac{1}{2}$ million dilapidated ones during the next ten years. This should create 250,000 new jobs annually, plus employment of vocational and craft teachers who will be needed to help create a skilled labor force.

2. Creation of medical, hospital, nursing and dental services for rural people up to the urban standard. This should create another 10,000 new jobs a year. Training and scholarships for education in medical and dental service fields are needed.

3. Improvement of the rural education service by building 50,000 new class-rooms and investing 40 per cent more in rural education. This should create 10,000 additional new jobs a year. The new occupational capacity, with new employment, will create a new tax base to recover the costs.

4. Planning, engineering and construction of 30,000 rural town water and sewer systems. This should create 18,000 new jobs annually. It will fulfill the nation's commitment to raise the rural living environment up to the existing urban level.

5. The vocational training and remedial education services needed to prepare people for work on these construction and development projects will employ about 20,000 skilled personnel annually.

The entire project is financially solvent, since new incomes will create both a loan repayment base and an adequate new tax base to recover public costs. A tax-paying man will exist for every $50,000 of new trade, and ample new trade is in sight. The public investment needed is $6 billion a year, all recoverable, with Congress and the Treasury Department acting as the banker.

Private investment of $10 billion directed to rural areas, out of $80 billion invested annually in total national capital expansion, will be needed to expand the rural economy sufficiently, including construction of about 200 new medium-sized rural cities to accommodate population increases.

A re-direction of 2½ per cent of urban-consumer spending toward purchase of rural commodities, instead of city-manufactured commodities, will be required to restore American agriculture to a solvent basis. This investment will be recovered in national tax income and avoidance of excessive welfare, crime, delinquency, and urban service costs.

The alternative to such a program is a growing rate of institutional poverty whose total social cost would be about $40,000 per dependent family in a large city.

New rural city development without an industrial base is a creative possibility in this program. The existing policy of rural-city development around transplanted industries or so-called "industrial nodes" requires re-examination. Work force needs are declining in basic manufacturing, and the national employment expansion is in the field of occupations in which people serve each other. This phenomenon makes it possible to locate a planned rural city any where with a sound economy based on service occupations, such as trade, recreation, property maintenance, medical service, education, baby sitting, construction to serve expanding population, transport, and cultural activities.

If an industry is needed and feasible, mobile power units can be available to locate the industry anywhere that it is desired. For example, if a new rural city is desired in Southern Alabama, technological trade and employment resources make this possible. Relatives may visit relatives in any 100-mile radius. Jobs may exist nearby the residences of working people who will commute to their jobs.

Only such a development program can lay the basis for eliminating poverty permanently in the United States. The minimum annual saving will be the $2 billion which poverty is estimated to cost the nation.

The fear that an adequate program for rural development cannot be financed due to competition for funds for military purposes is unjustified. The war in Viet Nam, costing $18 billion annually, is still only a subordinate expenditure in a $700 billion national economy. The financing of such a war should not impair the steady development of the American economy or the rendering of ever-greater services to an expanding population. The only really wrong policy would be to stop expansion and curtail services. A vigorous America requires healthy, well-educated, and usefully-employed citizens.

National Sharecroppers Fund, 112 East 19th Street, New York, New York 10003

THE CONDITION OF FARM WORKERS AND SMALL FARMERS IN 1965

REPORT TO THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND
by Fay Bennett, Executive Director

"There still lies ahead the establishment for migrant farm labor of the standards of both decency and efficiency which are characteristic of other employment in this country."

Secretary of Labor W. Willard Wirtz in Year of Transition: Seasonal Farm Labor, 1965

"I used to wonder how all my white neighbors got such fine cows and fine pastures and fine tractors. I kept snooping around and I found out my white neighbors were getting loans from the government. My [county] agent hadn't told me that!"

Participant in Alabama Conference on Governmental Anti-Poverty and Other Programs to Aid Low-Income Rural People, co-sponsored by NSF

"I think I've been on strike all my days 'cause I've been suffering all my days. I don't mind suffering . . . Let me suffer till I get to the good . . . . For God's sake stop grumbling and see the thing right."

Mrs. Adkins of Shaw, Mississippi, in statewide Mississippi Freedom Labor Union Meeting, Sept. 4, 1965

The Year in Brief

1965 was a year of transition and hope for hired farm workers, of dispossession and struggle for marginal farmers. The end of dependence on foreign contract workers and the proof that domestic workers were available if jobs met minimum standards characterized the transition. Strike action and union organization marked a new militancy among farm workers. Continued mechanization made thousands of sharecroppers "expendable" and day laborers idle, as economic change was brutally speeded by evictions following voter registration and other civil rights activities. The war on poverty moved into southern rural areas but its pace lagged far behind the national effort.

Fewer and Richer Farms; Fewer and Poorer People

Between 1939 and 1964, 2.4 million farms disappeared; 95 per cent of them were small farms with less than $2,500 in annual gross sales, and about a fourth of them were worked by sharecroppers. Only about 1.5 million small farms are left now. In the same period, the number of farms with gross sales of $10,000 and more rose two and one-half times. In the South, three million people have left the land since 1940. Most of those forced off southern farms have been Negro sharecroppers and tenant farmers who have migrated to northern and western ghetto communities. (At one point they were flocking to the Watts area in Los Angeles at the rate of 1,000 a month.)

The displacement of people from southern farms may be accounted for by many factors. Chief among these is continued mechanization. Mechanical cotton pickers and grain harvesters are eliminating sharecropping in the deep South, leaving only half a million day laborers. In the Delta area, 95 per cent of the cotton will be machine-picked in 1966--in contrast with 69 per cent in 1965--and 20,000 more farm laborers will be made idle. The coming mechanization of tobacco will have a similar effect in states just to the north of the cotton belt. Across the continent in California, about a third of the 1965 tomato crop--116,000 acres--was reaped by 262 machines; in 1966, a major portion of the tomatoes will be planted for machine harvesting.

Hundreds of farmers are being dispossessed in Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana for participating in civil rights activities. The dispossession of others will be speeded by the Food and Agriculture Act of 1965; in the Mississippi Delta alone, one-third of the 925,000 cotton acres will be taken out of production.

Productivity continues to rise. The labor of one farm worker supplied the farm product needs of 11 people in 1940, 15 in 1950, 26 in 1960, and 33 in 1964.

Hired Farm Workers

There are about 2.5 million households with one or more members who do some hired farm work during the year. More than half of these live below the poverty level (defined as less than $3,000 income from all sources); in this group are more than 80 per cent of the non-white families, and more than 70 per cent of the families headed by a migrant.

In 1964, the last year for which full figures are available, there were approximately 664,000 full-time farm workers in the United States and about 2.5 million seasonal workers. Of these, about 386,000 were migratory workers and 272,000 of them did 25 or more days' work during the year. In 1964, migrants worked an average of 131 days at farm and nonfarm work and earned an average of $1,240. Nearly half (44 per cent) of them did both farm and nonfarm work with average earnings of $585 at farm work and $1,049 at nonfarm work. Those who did only farm work averaged $935 in annual earnings. A special wage survey made by the Department of Labor in May, 1965, covered 1.5 million farm wage workers. Seventy per cent of them were paid less than $1.25 an hour. More than one-third (in the South, 54 per cent) were paid less than 75 cents an hour.

Safety. The National Safety Council has again branded agriculture as one of the most hazardous of all industries. In 1965, agriculture ranked below only the mining and construction industries in death rate. It had the largest total number of deaths, 3,200, and 270,000 disabling injuries.

Children. More than one-fourth of the entire hired farm working force are young people less than 17 years of age. (In 1962, farm wage worker households with less than $3,000 income included 3 million members not yet 18, about 27 per cent of all children and youth in the poverty sector.) There is as yet no national legislation to prevent child labor in agriculture outside of school hours, as there is in other industries. "Crop vacations" are common from Maine to Louisiana, nullifying the school-hour protection. In the year ending June 30, 1965, Department of Labor inspectors found 2,300 farms violating child labor laws and a total of 7,076 children under 16 working during school hours. More than half of these were in the 10-13 age bracket.

Housing and Health. Despite the existence of new government programs providing financial aid for farm labor housing, too many farm worker families still live in miserable conditions. Investigation into an alleged labor shortage in Florida last spring uncovered these conditions:

> ". . . There are no camps in Dade County with indoor plumbing for each cabin. The electrical outlet provides a bare bulb for light. . . . Sometimes burlap is the only privacy between rooms. The floors and walls are generally bare, unpainted planks. Families with 10 and 12 children can live in one two-room shack for $8 to $10 a week. . . . 'A new camp would have to live up to the letter of the law,' says [one] Sanitation Inspector. . . . 'That's why there are so few new camps.' "

Small wonder that migrant families are more prone to illness than others; that diarrhea is chronic among children; parasitic and fungal diseases common; neglect of teeth, eye, and ear ailments prevalent.

Foreign Workers. 1965 was the year of transition for farm labor, domestic and foreign. Mexican braceros, always the bulk of foreign contract workers, were no longer available under Public Law 78, which had expired. The challenge of attracting a sufficient number of domestic workers to replace them had to be met and, for the most part, was met. Use of foreign labor was reduced 83 per cent, from 634,000 man-months (equivalent to 52,800 full-time jobs) in 1964, to 110,000 man-months (9,200 jobs) in 1965; Mexican labor was reduced 95 per cent. In 1964, there had been 178,000 Mexican contract workers in 17 states; in 1965, there were 20,300, all in California. The use of British West Indians did not decrease proportionately. In 1964, there were 14,000; in 1965, although there were 14,100 in Florida alone, man-months dropped from 81,000 to 64,000; but there were also 1,340 BWI's working in apples and 800 in tobacco. The number of Canadians imported to New England states dropped from 8,000 in 1964 to 4,484 in 1965--3,627 in potatoes and 857 in apples. Of the 1,080 Japanese and 110 Filipinos in the United States at the end of 1964, 200 Japanese remained by the end of 1965. All of the temporary workers imported in 1965 came in under P.L. 414, the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Average hourly wages for farm workers rose from $1.08 to $1.14, the largest one-year increase since the Korean War. Crop values were up even in the three crops--asparagus, strawberries, and pickle cucumbers--where crop losses may have been attributable in part to labor shortages. The price of fresh fruits and vegetables went down in 1965 (by 4.5 per cent, comparing November, 1964, to November, 1965), while the Consumer Price Index rose 1.7 per cent.

Farm Worker Organization

Large-scale militant union activity among farm workers developed in 1965 in widely separated parts of the country.

Cotton choppers and pickers, paid $2.50 or $3.00 for a 10-hour day, formed 90 per cent of the membership of the Mississippi Freedom Labor Union; but they were joined by tractor drivers, haulers, domestic servants, part-time carpenters, mechanics, handymen, former sharecroppers, and renters. The MFLU demands were for a $1.25 an hour minimum wage, an 8½-hour day with time-and-a-half for overtime, sick pay, health and accident insurance, and equal employment practices. Evicted strikers and croppers set up a tent city. If MFLU cannot bring the huge plantation owners to the bargaining table, it may at least focus national attention on the need for alternatives for the poor people of the cotton country.

The grape strike broke out after Filipino workers returned from Coachella Valley, California, where they had received $1.40 an hour plus an incentive piece rate, to Delano where wages were $1.25 and the incentive smaller. They called for help from the AFL-CIO's Agricultural Workers Organizing Committee. When employers refused to discuss wages, working conditions, and a union contract, between six and eight hundred workers struck. Within two weeks, 1,200 Mexican-Americans, organized in the National Farm Workers Association, joined them. Harrassment and arrests by employers and local authorities were constant. The strike continued from the picking season into pruning, the beginning of the next crop year. (In 1966, Schenley Industries has recognized the union and the Di Giorgio Corporation has suggested an election.)

Other areas were affected. At Lantana, on the East Coast of Florida, 14 farm workers struck, demanding a wage increase, but lost; just south of Lantana a strike was averted when demands were met. A wage increase was secured in the Pompano Beach area by a strike threat coupled with a labor shortage. A five-day strike of 800 British West Indian cane cutters at the Okeelanta Sugar Refinery was lost. The Steelworkers union organized Cypress Gardens Citrus Products, Inc., of Eloise, Florida's largest multi-purpose citrus plant, as the beginning of an organizing drive. In Louisiana, the Fish, Seafood, Agricultural and Allied Workers Union No. 300 secured for Gulf Coast pogy boatmen their first over-all pay increase in 25 years. Local 300, affiliated with the Amalgamated Meat Cutters, includes dairy, sugar, and rice workers in addition to the fishermen.

Legislation

Congress moved slowly in 1965 on bills which proposed coverage for farm workers under minimum wage requirements, child labor regulations, collective bargaining guarantees, and unemployment compensation. Although both Senate and House worked on separate, similar bills, only one piece of legislation--a House proposal to include farm laborers under minimum wage coverage--was reported favorably out of Committee, but it did not come up for a vote before the session ended. (In March, 1966, a new minimum wage bill was reported favorably out of Committee.) In September, 1965, a proposal to transfer the authority to import foreign workers in times of domestic labor shortage from the Labor Secretary to the Agriculture Secretary was narrowly defeated.

More action was seen in state legislatures than in some years. Five states strengthened regulations governing housing and sanitary conditions. California enacted the first law requiring employers to provide sanitary facilities in the fields. Texas now requires a tuberculosis examination for persons seeking migratory work. Florida and Michigan set safety standards for motor vehicles used to transport migratory workers, and California improved its vehicle code. North Dakota deleted the exemption for agricultural workers from its minimum wage law, but Michigan suspended coverage of certain agricultural operations. New Jersey broadened its wage payment and collection law to include agricultural workers. Maine, Michigan, New Hampshire, and Oregon amended workmen's compensation laws to provide some coverage for agricultural workers.

Federal Programs

Farmers Home Administration. In 1965 FHA loaned more than $798 million to help 12,186 farm families buy, enlarge, or develop farms; gave short-term operating credit to 118,000; assisted more than 12,000 with antipoverty loans; loaned $13 million which provided new or improved housing for more than 5,500 rural persons aged 62 and older; and gave credit assistance to 388 rural communities to construct water systems. Unfortunately, however, generations of discrimination have produced such inequalities that many Negro farmers cannot now meet qualifications for loans. In several Southern states, little change is yet visible. The number of farmers who have applied but not received loans is not known, and others have not even applied either because they do not know how or because they are sure they will be rejected.

ASCS. According to Department of Agriculture reports as of December 30, 1965, in the 1965 Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service elections 12,471 Negroes were on the ballot for various offices in 14 southern states. None was elected either member or first alternate to a County Committee but five were elected second alternates. On the Community Committees, 85 were elected regular members, 131 first alternates, and 303 second alternates. Without members on County Committees, Negro farmers still lack the effective representation needed to change traditional discriminatory policies. Reports from Deep South states indicate that in some areas elected Negro members are not being notified of Community Committee meetings or allowed to participate in their activities.

Office of Economic Opportunity. The Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 made possible, under Title III-B, programs for farm workers in education, sanitation, day care, and self-help housing. In 1965, OEO granted some $26 million in Title III-B funds to 65 public and private nonprofit organizations in 20 states. Around 350 VISTA volunteers are working with migrants. Under EOA's rural loan programs, nearly 25,000 rural families received $36.5 million in 13 months (including January, 1966), and in southern states, nearly 40 per cent of the family loans have been made to Negro borrowers. OEO has financed small machinery cooperatives, and more than half of these are made up partly or entirely of Negro farmers. EOA made possible additional projects under Community Action Program auspices, but the most impoverished communities--mainly in the rural South--have received the least antipoverty funds, because they lack the organization and technical help needed to initiate projects.

Training Programs. Since 1962, more than 20,000 persons have been trained in agricultural skills under the Manpower Development and Training Act and the Area Redevelopment Act. Training is also given in basic literacy skills and for nonfarm occupations in areas where workers are needed. Hundreds of thousands are in need of such training as their old agricultural occupations are disappearing.

A Program for Rural America

The crises of American cities and farms, so different on the surface, are inextricably bound together. Dramatic evidence is the annual migration of a million people from rural to urban areas.

Remedial programs are needed to raise the living standards of rural people: inclusion of farm workers in all the protections of social legislation that benefit industrial workers; increased programs of loans and technical assistance to enable small farmers to remain on the land and to raise their income levels.

But beyond that, a program is needed large enough to meet the human needs of the rural areas:

* A million new rural homes are needed in the next ten years, and two and one-half million homes need major repairs.
* Rural medical, hospital, nursing, and dental services must be brought up to urban standards.
* Educational facilities must be increased at least to urban levels, requiring a 40 per cent greater investment in education, including construction of approximately 50,000 new classrooms.
* 30,000 rural town water and sewage systems are needed.

Vocational training and remedial education are needed to equip people for employment in these construction and development projects. The training of professionals to staff increased facilities will call for a steadily expanding number of educators and educational institutions. Following the basic medical and educational services should come a host of other social, cultural, and recreational facilities and personnel.

From a quarter to a half million new jobs could be created to meet the basic and expanding needs of the rural areas. On the basis of the new job-created incomes, the disappearing small towns of stagnating rural economies will become thriving small cities with new needs, new construction, new business, in a spiraling cycle of activity.

National Sharecroppers Fund

*has field representatives in Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Tennessee, helping poverty-stricken people to help themselves, bringing knowledge of federal assistance programs available, and working to end discrimination in their implementation. (Four representatives work under the Rural Advancement Project, NSF's cooperative program with the Southern Regional Council and the State Councils on Human Relations.)

*set up the Southern Rural Training Project under contract with the Department of Labor to stimulate and develop training programs for the hard-core rural poor.

*carried on a crash five-month Farm Labor Counseling Program to advise unemployed rural poor about criteria farm jobs, training opportunities, and other means of increasing their employability and income.

*works to end the exclusion of agricultural workers from the protections and benefits of social legislation that other workers enjoy, and to protect them from the unfair competition of foreign contract labor.

*supports the efforts of farm workers in organizing unions and low-income farmers in organizing cooperatives.

*works with government and other private agencies to help low-income rural people secure a better life.

NATIONAL SHARECROPPERS FUND -- 112 East 19th Street, New York, N.Y. 10003

Copy for Thos

Shifting Concepts of Worker Security

THE CONCEPT of a job territory, of a jurisdiction to be guarded against intruders and to be parceled out equitably among the territorial occupants, has been substantially weakened over the decades as the heart of worker concern with job security. The drift has been from focusing on property rights in the job to guaranteed rights to a job, from holding the job to getting and keeping a job.

This is an essential difference. Restriction of numbers and work-spreading devices are still possible recourses against economic or technical change. But we have seen the proliferation of many others: adequate advance notice of displacement; attrition, early retirement, retraining, transfer, and relocation allowances developed as methods of avoiding layoffs; severance pay, supplemental unemployment benefits, and vesting of pension rights as methods of easing the burden of unemployment; development and improvement of placement and referral services, training for jobs outside the plant, union-sponsored and other training programs, apprenticeship, and antidiscrimination policies as methods of facilitating new employment. There are, in short, new and varied methods of adjusting to and accommodating change.

There are no intrinsic limits any longer to bind a new or a renewed leadership from pushing toward Neil Chamberlain's goal for the trade union where the ultimate concern is with the individual worker's personal assets inventory, with its development, upgrading, and ongoing maintenance.

There has also been a major shift along the self-reliance vector from the earlier voluntarist limited group self-help of the Gompers-style union to a greater recognition and acceptance of the broadened role of government in the society. The Gompers-era "job conscious" union barely tolerated the very limited government efforts to regulate a few minimal work standards for the inherently weaker groups of the labor force such as women or children. The modal American union today appreciates the interdependence of worker organization and government action.

Pressures from many sources have played upon the unions to extend the scope of substantive worker interests. The result is that unions today are vitally concerned with levels and rates of growth, medicare, education, housing, area redevelopment, general poverty elimination programs, tax programs, trade expansion programs, international trade and aid programs, the development of poor countries, aid to labor movements abroad, and so on. These other directed, public, national, and international conscious interests may still take a back seat in relation to the more self-centered interests in wages, hours, and terms and conditions of work. That they exist at all, however, is ample reflection of a dramatic shift over time in the scope of worker organizational interests.

There is also the related pressure imposed upon the labor scene in recent years which seems to make an occasional dent in shifting labor's traditional short-term here-and-now job gains time horizon to a somewhat broader span. The really remarkable (if ultimately ineffective) joint declaration of intent signed last year by employer and trade union leaders in the United Kingdom may be (whether we approve of such drift or not) the harbinger of comparable things to come in this country.

We are still a far cry from a solidarism of all mankind, but the recent civil rights and poverty programs have both received private and public support from the labor movement. The tempo or the vigor of this support may be criticized by spokesmen for the affected groups or by the articulate prodders of labor, but warranted or not, such carping tends only to distract our view from what is relevant for this point, i.e., that the labor movement of 1965 has come a long way from Mr. Strasser's characterization of his own relations to the men and women outside his Cigarmakers local.

There remains a far distance to travel yet to reach the extremes at the opposite pole of the "job conscious" union's cluster of vector values, but a cross-sectional comparison of the vector fields of the 1965 and the 1925 American labor movement will reveal to any viewer a series of remarkable interim changes. And none of these reinforces the current validity or meaningfulness of a "job conscious" unionism cover label for the behavioral mix we see now or can project for the near future for the American labor movement.

—ABRAHAM J. SIEGEL
Massachusetts Institute of Technology

Va – 16th 30 mins (4/17/64)

The Changing South

Introductory tie-in to changing labor movement

Strait job consciousness to awareness of what protects jobs + ideals + awareness of how to express group interest –

Economic development

indices

Political developments –

Reapp. – Negro vote – Negro-Labor coalition

2-party

Urbanization

Desegr & civil rts. – a big change But its right

Union growth & opportunity –

New allies –

Training & ed. – benefitting an expanding econ.

New industries

Service organizations

We've had talk of New South – we can have a better one than ever before – 1st Expanded Ag. – of hats, insecurity on jobs, explosions for our children's safety & future – for our all

2nd No slavery (the forced N.S.), 3rd Industry, 4th Dem. society – new freedom (greatest is freedom from fear in our South it's still fair to emphasize fun Negro & whites alike – & together – unions can be a part of it – we can be ...

Final DRAFT

Jerry T. Verner

File

31

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Farmers
Income
occupational structure
What kinds of jobs do Negroes hold

REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS

TO THE

CONFERENCE

WASHINGTON, D. C.

May 14, 1966

DRAFT

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

May 14, 1966

MEMORANDUM FOR: Frank G. Armstrong
Woodrow Ginsburg
Eli Ginzberg
Dr. Hylan Lewis
Mahlon Tasker Puryear
Ramon S. Scruggs
Dr. Harold L. Sheppard
Dr. Emory Via
Dr. Thomas T. Williams

The enclosed draft of the Economic Security and Welfare Task Force Paper is forwarded for your information.

cc: Albert L. Shostack

OPTIONAL FORM NO. 10
MAY 1962 EDITION
GSA FPMR (41 CFR) 101-11.6

UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Memorandum

TO : Members
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

DATE: May 16, 1966

FROM : Vivian W. Henderson, Chairman Vivian W. Henderson / gmb
Task Force on Economic Security and Welfare

SUBJECT: May 12 Draft of Paper on Economic Security and Welfare

We have been working diligently in our attempt to bring to a head the task force paper on economic security and welfare. Under separate cover you will receive a copy of the report in its next-to-final draft. We hope to put the final draft in the hands of the printer on May 19. With this deadline, you will appreciate the need for your immediate response to the document and your suggestions for its improvement.

What we have done is to try to select priority items from the extensive set of recommendations, and to expand on them in text form. I would appreciate it if you would communicate to us as quickly as possible whatever recommendations and suggestions you have with regard to the document. Thanks for your cooperation. You will be hearing further from us.

Buy U.S. Savings Bonds Regularly on the Payroll Savings Plan

5010-108

Recognize Nat'l Problems — nature of But Secs need for advantages in encouraging local action —

List of recs — agency specified
Page on which found
Special program labels

INTRODUCTION

Nat'l — Technical Service
Students
Programs
Legal & policy Planning

Local Planning
Program

Therefore, I want to announce tonight that I intend to call a White House conference of scholars, and experts, and outstanding Negro leaders -- men of both races -- and officials of government at every level.

This White House conference's theme and title will be "To Fulfill These Rights."

Its object will be to help the American Negro fulfill the rights which, after the long time of injustice, he is finally about to secure.

To move beyond opportunity to achievement.

To shatter forever not only the barriers of law and public practice, but the walls which bound the condition of man by the color of his skin.

To dissolve, as best we can, the antique enmities of the heart which diminish the holder, divide the great democracy, and do wrong -- great wrong -- to the Children of God.

--From Remarks of the President at
Howard University, June 4, 1965

In convening this White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights," the President has summoned a broadly representative cross section of America to a momentous undertaking. He has asked us to exercise all the collective wisdom we possess to devise and set in motion an action program for citizens and communities across the country. The objective, as simple to define as it is difficult to achieve, is to translate the promise of equality into reality for millions of Negro Americans.

Fortunately, we have the benefit of much sound preparatory work. In anticipation of this Conference, the President last fall called a Planning Session to explore the widest possible range of ideas in this field. The session was held on November 17 and 18, 1965. Some 200 scholars and practitioners in the areas of civil rights, labor, business, education, religion, and social welfare met for intensive working sessions on eight subjects of major concern. The result was a comprehensive set of recommendations reflecting a rich variety of viewpoints and experience.

In February the President appointed a 30-member Council, under the chairmanship of Mr. Ben Heineman and the honorary chairmanship of Mr. A. Philip Randolph, to set the policies and oversee the detailed planning for the White House Conference. An able staff and a number of consultants reviewed and refined the recommendations at the Planning Session and conducted the other preparatory work for the Conference. At every stage of the planning, they were guided by the Council's determinations.

The Council met on evenings and weekends for extended review and discussion of plans and proposals submitted by the staff. The format of the Conference, the subjects to be considered, this Report and the recommendations it embodies -- all are the results of this thoughtful process. Thus what you are asked to consider here, and the way in which your deliberations are organized, represent the considered judgments of the Council as the policy-making body of the Conference.

Some of the judgments were difficult to make. The President has accurately described the problems confronting Negro Americans as "a seamless web." The strands of this web reach into every area of American life, and none of these interrelated aspects of the problem is without its urgent and anguishing features. Yet no single conference could productively trace the thread of Negro disadvantage through the whole fabric of society. In order to achieve a common focus on specific action efforts, it was necessary to select a manageable number of areas of concentration.

There will be many other meetings and conferences, private and governmental, national and local, at which problems of racial injustice and inequality and alternative approaches to them will be considered. Therefore, it was not judged necessary that this Conference diffuse and dilute its efforts by trying to deal with the entire range of problems and possible solutions that are worthy of discussion. Rather, the objective was to focus on a few vital areas in which something specific and immediate can be done and in which the results can be far-reaching. This was a major task confronting the Council, and it received fullest consideration.

The resulting conclusion was that the Conference should direct its primary attention to four critical subject-matter areas -- economic security and welfare, education, housing, and administration of justice. It was also decided that there should be developed in each of these areas a limited number of specific proposals for local action to which the conferees could address themselves. With whatever revisions and alternative proposals they might devise, the participants could then commit their efforts in their own communities to actions which will achieve early and important effects.

The Council's Report is designed to serve these purposes. It seeks to summarize, succinctly but thoroughly, the chief problems in each subject area that deny Negroes their full share of participation in the life of the nation. It defines the broad goals that must be attained if we are to realize "not just equality as a right and a theory, but equality as a fact and as a result." It details major actions that need to be taken by various elements of our society -- by government at all levels; by private groups, such as business, labor, religious, and voluntary organizations; and, in some instances, by private citizens themselves, acting individually.

Finally, the Council proposes several specific local activities in each area on which Conference participants and other public-spirited citizens may concentrate their efforts.

As the Report clearly indicates, there is no intention to slight the importance of governmental action, whether federal, state, or local. The need for additional legislation, administrative changes, and executive leadership at all three levels of government has been extensively treated; the proposals in this category and the Conference reactions to them will be transmitted to the President and will be made available to state and local public officials.

But the Conference would fail in its main purpose if it did no more than that. Governmental action, however forceful and creative, cannot succeed unless it is accompanied by a mobilization of effort by private citizens and the organizations and institutions through which they express their will. Indeed, the role of government itself is in large part determined by the presence or absence of such citizen efforts.

That is why the major emphasis of this Conference must be on immediate, practical steps to enlist in this cause the great mass of uncommitted, uninvolved Americans.

That is why we must not end these discussions without a common resolve to return to our communities and undertake those specific actions for which our varied interests and positions best fit us.

It was the Council's judgment that in a conference of this kind the participants should not be asked to take formal action on the various recommendations or to formulate and vote on resolutions. Instead, all reactions, comments, and suggestions of the participants will be recorded verbatim and transcribed immediately after each session. Thus all of the views expressed will be available for careful study and faithful reflection in the report to the President which will be prepared and submitted after the Conference.

Fortunately, we do not have to spend a great amount of time defining the problems with which we must deal; they have been described, analyzed, and discussed at length in many forums and in the preparatory stages of this Conference. Nor do we need to expend our energies convincing one another that the conditions suffered by most Negro Americans are intolerable; the President has presented that case in the most eloquent, moving, and urgent of terms. That is why we are here.

The challenge before us now is to chart a course of action to which every thoughtful American can subscribe.

ECONOMIC SECURITY AND WELFARE

INTRODUCTION

There is no more ugly and urgent crisis facing this nation today than the economic insecurity of Negro Americans. An unending cycle of human devastation and national loss is at the core of this crucial problem.

The employment and income problems of the Negro population are complex, long-standing, and rooted deeply in economic, social, and political disabilities. More than anything else, they are the consequence of cumulative disabilities imposed by racial discrimination in employment, education, training, and housing. To solve these problems, creative and large-scale action must be taken to achieve full and fair employment for the Negro working-age population, and equal opportunity, decent living standards, and security for all of the nation'a Negro citizens. The need for action is urgent.

The Unemployment Crisis

Negro unemployment is of disaster proportions. Even in today's booming economy, the unemployment rate for Negroes is about eight percent--more than twice the national average and about three times that of whites. Unemployment has not fallen below eight percent since 1953. The gap between whites and nonwhites is even greater for married people and heads of households (particularly women) who are most in need of a job to support their families.

Negroes only comprise eleven percent of the nation's labor force, but make up more than twenty percent of the nation's unemployed. In some areas such as Watts in Los Angeles, the rate of unemployment among Negroes is as high as forty percent.

Not only is unemployment higher among Negroes, but they tend to be out-of-work for longer periods than whites. They also suffer heavily from underemployment, including part-time work, substandard pay, and the necessity of accepting jobs below their skill or educational potentials.

The most serious unemployment problem is the shocking incidence of joblessness among Negro youths. Although this problem has been decreasing in recent months, fully 18 percent of out-of-school Negro youths aged 16 to 21 were unemployed in February 1966. This is twice the rate for white youths and it means that thousands of young Negro people who are actively looking for jobs cannot find a productive place in our society. In addition, it is estimated that many thousands of youths have withdrawn from the labor force, or refrained from entering it, because they have given up hope of finding decent employment.

The unemployment rate for Negro youths ages 16-19 is nothing less than catastropic, averaging more than 30 percent for girls and almost 25 percent for male teenagers in 1965. Female Negro teenagers have a higher rate of unemployment than all other sub-groups in the labor force.

The unemployment statistics do not tell the full story of wasted human resources. Many Negroes who are counted among the employed are actually involuntarily working only part-time, and lack full measure of economic security. Another problem is that even under conditions of relatively full employment a significant proportion of teenagers and adults in the Negro working age population leave the labor force because they have given up hope of locating decent jobs. Despite their idleness, this group is also not counted as unemployed in the offical statistics.

Given these dimensions alone--the statistically defined unemployment rate, involuntary part-time employment, and idle members of the working age population--indications are that the actual total unemployment rate among Negroes approximates 12 percent of the working age population. This rate of unemployment is of crisis proportions, particularly in the urban centers.

Corrective action is urgent. Social unrest and tension continue to mount in Negro communities.

The economic loss to the entire nation, although a secondary consideration, cannot be ignored. If Negro unemployment were lowered to the current unemployment level of whites, the resulting gain in the Gross National Product would be $5 billion. If the average productivity of the Negro labor force equaled that of whites, the resulting gain in the GNP would be $22 billion. These gains, totaling $27 billion, do not include the further increment that would result if Negroes obtained jobs commensurate with their abilities and training. However, some investment is necessary to achieve these gains.

This annual economic loss is the result of discrimination--past and present. The losses translate themselves at the community level into depressed purchasing power for goods and services and the high costs of welfare assistance, delinquency and idleness.

Occupational Structure of the Negro Labor Force

The Negro's disadvantages do not end when he finds a job. Even when he is employed, he tends to work in low-skill, low-wage occupations and industries with the lowest growth rates and the most limited opportunities for advancement and mobility. And Negro working women are poorest of the working poor.

In recent years, technological change and other job market conditions have led to a rising demand for skilled craftsmen, white collar workers, and service workers, while reducing opportunities for unskilled and semi-skilled laborers. In particular, the technical, professional, clerical, sales, and related white collar occupations have shown rapid growth. Yet, it is precisely in the skilled and white collar occupations that the Negroes are heavily under-represented, while they are concentrated in the unskilled and semi-skilled labor categories in which job opportunities are most restricted.

Only one-fifth of all nonwhite workers hold white collar jobs, compared with almost one-half of all white workers. Only seven percent of all Negro workers are in the professional and technical category--half the proportion among whites. Only three percent of the nonwhite are managers, officials, or proprietors, compared with eleven percent of the whites. The figures for clerical workers are nine percent versus seventeen percent; for sales workers, two percent versus seven percent; for skilled craftsmen, seven percent versus thirteen percent.

How defined laborers

By contrast, twelve percent of all Negro workers are nonfarm laborers--three times the proportion of whites. And nonwhites are heavily represented among migratory and other seasonal farm workers and small tenant farmers who face severe underemployment, substandard earnings, and eventual replacement by new agricultural technology on large farms.

Negroes, especially Negro women, are heavily concentrated in the service occupations, which have shown rising manpower needs. However, they tend to be employed at household service, custodial, and other low-paid work rather than in the higher-paid service occupations.

To keep abreast of new technological demands and changes in occupational requirements, a fundamental alteration in the occupational structure of the Negro labor force is necessary. Otherwise, even in a full employment economy severe problems of economic insecurity are likely to continue.

Educational Attainment

A major problem in improving the occupational status of the Negro labor force is its relatively low average educational attainment. In 1962, for example, less than one-third of the nonwhite members of the labor force had completed high school, compared with a majority of the whites.

The school "drop-out" rate is a particularly severe problem among today's youth. Some three-fifths of out-of-school nonwhite youths aged 16 to 21 lack high school diplomas. In this era of technological advance and complex job requirements, "drop-outs" have twice the unemployment rates of high school graduates. When they are employed, they work for less pay and are more subject to layoffs and displacement by machines.

Although educational attainment has shown continuous improvement in successive generations, achievements in occupational status and earnings by Negro workers have not kept pace. The average Negro male with 16 or more years of school earns an annual income less than that earned by a white male with ten years of school.

Income Levels

The income of the average Negro family is little more than half of the white family income. It is true that the Negro income level is rising, with greatest progress in Northern and Western urban areas. However, the rapid rise of incomes among whites has prevented a narrowing of the income gap between the races. Even when whites and Negroes are employed in the same occupation, and have had the same number of years of schooling, the average incomes of the two groups show this disparity.

Population and Labor Force Characteristics

Today there are more than 20 million Negro Americans. They comprise more than one-tenth of the nation's total population.

There are some 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force; i.e., employed or looking for jobs. They include about 3.5 million women. By 1970, the total is expected to reach ten million.

The figure of 8.5 million Negroes in the labor force, however, presents an incomplete picture. Many members of the working age populations are not in the labor force but could be if jobs and incentives in the form of decent earnings were consistently available to them. Thus, eight percent of all Negro men aged 25 to 64 were not in the labor force in 1963, compared with only five percent of comparable whites. On the other hand, the proportion of Negro women who work or seek jobs is considerably higher than the proportion of whites, since more of the former are primary family wage earners or must supplement the wages of their husbands.

The Negro population is now a predominantly urban one. About three-fourths of all Negroes live in urban areas, mainly in larger cities with populations of more than 50,000. The six cities of New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, Washington, D.C., and Los Angeles alone account for one-fifth of all Negro people. There are 18 cities in which 100,000 or more Negroes live--these cities account for almost one-third of the total Negro population.

The concentration of Negroes in largely segregated areas of central cities, while white residents, industrial establishments, and offices move toward the suburbs, constitutes an important factor in framing proposals to improve economic and welfare conditions.

The heavy out-movement of Negroes from the South in search of better economic, educational, social, and political status (3.3 million left the South between 1940 and 1965) is an important factor in planning action programs. However, over one-half of all Negroes still live in the Southern States, and there are recent indications that the rate of out-migration is decreasing.

Most of the Negroes who still live in rural areas are in the South. Even in that region, however, almost three-fifths of all Negro people are urban residents. In 1960, two out of every five residents of Birmingham, Atlanta, and New Orleans were Negroes.

While urban problems must command an increasing proportion of our attention, we cannot overlook two facts. First, many of the hard-core economic security and welfare problems Negroes face are in rural areas. Second, those rural migrants who find their way into the stream of urban life bring with them problems which impede significantly their ability to adjust to present and future urban labor markets. The adjustment problems of the migrants is due, in part, to the failure of most urban areas to prepare for the influx of new residents and to take steps to ease their transition to urban life.

Basic Considerations

There is no single, simple, or quick solution for the economic problems of Negroes but nothing less than a broadly based "crash" program can significantly improve the life-chances of hundreds of thousands of Negro Americans now trapped in joblessness and poverty. The range of action needed to achieve an adequate level of employment and income security must cover the multi-faceted problems of many different sub-groups. Assistance to jobless Negro youths would not be adequate to meet the needs of under-employed Negro adults. Action to help farmers and farm workers would not necessarily improve the lot of people seeking work in metropolitan areas. Lowering bars against Negro women in professional employment must be paralleled by upgrading pay and status of the nearly one million Negro women in household employment. Programs to aid the unemployed mother who depends on public assistance for a livelihood need a different approach from those to enhance opportunities for the Negro professional or business-man. Lasting solutions must be tailored, therefore, to the particular needs of specific components of the Negro population.

Moreover, it must be re-emphasized that the economic problems Negroes share with other disadvantaged workers are compounded for Negroes by the continuing widespread presence of racial segregation and racial discrimination. Because of the effects of discrimination and ghetto life, solutions must go beyond strictly economic measures and be related to social, political, and psychological needs.

There is mounting awareness--reflected, for example, in the nation's "War on Poverty," that conventional programs to solve the employment needs of Negroes must be accompanied by a wide range of supportive services designed to instill favorable work attitudes and fill gaps in basic education, solve health and family problems, and overcome other barriers to the individual's labor force adjustments.

Recommendations to improve the economic security and welfare of the Negro people must take into account the magnitude of the Negro's disadvantages in the job market, the wide gap between the income and employment status of whites and nonwhites, and the changing characteristics and geographic distribution of the Negro population and labor force. They must take into account sharp and decisive advances in technology and other such forces which generate abundant benefits to some and disproportionate burdens to others.

In preparing the recommendations in the following pages, consideration has been given to all the fundamental factors underlying the Negro's economic disadvantages. A wide-ranging battery of specific and realistic actions is proposed, calculated to achieve sharp progress on a variety of fronts--jobs, training, nondiscrimination, supportive services, labor standards, income maintenance, public assistance, and others. The document presented here, however, makes no attempt to set forth a detailed rationale for every recommendation. Supporting statements containing more complete explanations are appended for some of the recommendations.

Attention is called to one fundamental point which underlies the various specific proposals in this report. This point, which must be stressed, is that measures to improve the economic security and welfare of Negroes take effect most rapidly in a healthy, growing, full employment economy. The availability of jobs at fair wages to all who need them eases the task of eliminating discrimination, upgrading the Negro work force, raising labor standards, and providing income security. Consequently, the attainment and maintenance of a full employment economy is an item of continuing high priority.

Action recommended in this report involves all sectors of the American community--business enterprises and organized labor; Federal as well as state and local governments; educational bodies; private foundations; community organizations such as churches and health and welfare groups; and the spectrum of national associations as well as Negro organizations and groups themselves. The intention is to mobilize the nation's brainpower and material resources for a systematic and many-sided effort to eliminate the barriers that prevent the full participation of Negro men and women in the economic and social process.

I. ESTABLISH METROPOLITAN JOBS COUNCILS IN ALL MAJOR URBAN AREAS TO PLAN, COORDINATE, AND IMPLEMENT LOCAL PROGRAMS TO INCREASE JOBS

Why the Recommendation Is Needed

No longer can access to a job or the acquisition of a job by Negroes be left to chance. Large scale and systematic efforts by employers, labor unions, and other community groups to provide and sustain a climate within which Negroes can get more and better jobs is necessary. To make these efforts effective, and to coordinate them with training, welfare, and other services, it is necessary to develop a new approach whereby local leadership can be mobilized for planning and action.

What Should Be Done

Metropolitan Jobs Councils should be established in each major urban area with a substantial Negro population. With urgent support from the highest levels of the national government, the initiative in establishing such councils should be taken promptly in all major cities of the U.S.

Membership of the Councils should include representatives of business, organized labor, metropolitan governments, education and training institutions, and other appropriate community organizations. Each Council should be free to develop its own organization and sources of funds, including foundations, business and labor contributions, and government grants. Technical assistance should be made available to the Councils by the U.S. Department of Labor.

The Councils should be concerned with developing accurate information on the Negro labor force and its job opportunities in the area, helping to coordinate and improve existing government and private programs to meet the economic needs of the community's Negro population, and planning programs and resources to provide additional services. The Councils should complement and assist the efforts of the Employment Service and private groups such as the Urban League, while its assumption of key functions should make it possible to reduce the number of overlapping local agencies.

The Councils should develop and keep up-to-date a Metropolitan Human Resources Action Program for the community. This Program, based on accurate information on the characteristics and needs of Negro workers, should include:

Note name & page after listed

a. Review and coordination of existing manpower and economic security programs in the area;

b. Identification of gaps in existing program services;

c. Definite goals on the number and types of Negro workers for whom employment, training, and other services are to be obtained over specified periods;

d. A listing of the specific actions and resources needed to meet these goals;

e. Assignments of definite responsibilities to participating groups for taking the necessary actions;

f. Definite priorities and timetables for actions to improve the employment opportunities and economic conditions of Negroes in the community.

The following illustrate the urgent and important activities that should be included in the Program.

1. The Councils should take positive steps to ensure that the business community, labor organizations, and government agencies assume maximum responsibility for expanding job opportunities for Negro workers. This should involve the acceptance by each employer of definite targets for employing and upgrading Negro workers. Technical assistance should be provided by the Councils to help employers make positive efforts to recruit Negro workers, review the potentials for promotion of Negro workers who are already employed, restructure vacant jobs to help Negro workers meet job requirements, expand employer training activities, and eliminate unnecessarily rigid hiring specifications such as artificial test criteria. Close cooperation between employers and Human Resource Development Centers should be arranged, with employers participating in efforts to adapt job opportunities to the particular needs and characteristics of the hard-core workers referred to them by the Center.

2. The Councils should establish or arrange for Human Resources Development Centers in areas of substantial Negro unemployment. In addition to programs aimed at large groups of workers, these Centers should take an individualized approach to the job, training, and related needs of workers with especially severe job market problems. The Centers should develop means of reaching disadvantaged Negro workers and encouraging them to utilize their services. Services should include diagnosis of the problems and needs that interfere with job seeking and adjustment of individual workers; intensive counseling; referral to health, welfare, or other services; referral to appropriate remedial education or training facilities; specialized job development services and placement of unemployed workers on jobs under continuing supervision by Center personnel. The stress should be on long-term continuous contact between counselors and disadvantaged workers, following-up closely on each worker's employment status and progress on the job, and consulting regularly with the employers involved to solve human relations problems.

3. The Councils should assume leadership in the local implementation of a national year-round youth job placement program, recommended in section V, below. It should also assume leadership or participate actively in other manpower, economic security, or related programs affecting Negroes, such as those directed at meeting manpower shortages and surpluses, and community economic development programs.

4. The Councils should arrange for surveys in Negro high-unemployment areas to study worker characteristics, potentials, and employment and training needs. The surveys should also identify special problems in such areas as health, housing, child care, transportation, and illiteracy. In areas where disadvantaged workers are concentrated, a door-to-door survey approach may be advisable.

5. The Councils should develop a system of periodic reports from local employers to identify jobs and occupations in which unemployed Negroes may find employment, to provide data on the hiring, employment levels, and occupational status of Negro workers, and assist in developing occupational training programs to help Negro applicants qualify for employment or upgrading.

6. The Councils should provide leadership in efforts to improve the processes and institutions of the job market, including:

a. Analyzing transportation facilities and fares to identify improvements needed to make all jobs in the community accessible to Negro residential areas.

b. Analyzing the kind of information on employment opportunities which is available to Negro workers, and developing improved means of communication in this area, adapted to the special needs of disadvantaged ghetto residents.

c. Working with local educational authorities to improve the quality and availability of vocational education in the area's public schools.

7. The Councils should conduct an extensive program of public education to combat prejudice and discrimination affecting the economic status of the Negro.

Rural poverty — relation to manpower force

II. CREATE A RURAL JOBS TASK FORCE TO DEVELOP AND COORDINATE A COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM OF ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE FOR RURAL NEGROES

Why the Recommendation Is Needed

For several decades the economic position of the southern Negro farmer and other rural residents has grown steadily worse. A substantial proportion of the more than four million Negroes still living in southern rural areas have incomes at the poverty level. Approximately 25,000 Negro farmers, some 10 percent of all Negro farmers in the South, have crops of sufficient commercial value to support their families above the subsistence level; the proportion among Southern white farmers is three times as great. At the same time thousands of less fortunate rural Negro families eke out an existence as marginal farmers, casual laborers, or welfare recipients on nonproductive farmland or in the fringes of small towns and cities. Still others are subjected to the harsh and ill-rewarded life which is still the lot of most of America's migrant workers. Poorly educated; poorly housed; victims of mechanization, shrinking acreage allotments, and racial prejudice; many impoverished Negro rural families move into the cities where they are least equipped to become self-supporting and well-adjusted members of the urban community.

What Should Be Done

Because the problems involved are approaching crisis proportions, and because of the special nature of the problems themselves, the Conference urgently recommends the appointment of an emergency Rural Jobs Task Force whose first report, with action recommendations, should be due no later than September 1.

This Task Force should include representatives of private groups, state and local governments, and appropriate Federal officials concerned with rural problems, with full representation from the geographic regions in which the problems are most severe.

The Task Force should focus on developing programs to provide jobs and other economic assistance for rural Negroes, to eliminate job handicaps caused by discriminatory denials of opportunity, to increase the effectiveness of existing government agricultural programs in meeting the needs of disadvantaged rural people, and to facilitate the economic and social adjustment of rural families moving to urban areas.

Specifically, the Task Force should recommend prompt and practical steps by which private and public resources can be used to:

1. Provide Negroes who are engaged in or who wish to engage in the operation of commercial or subsistence farms with means and incentives for achieving successful farm ownership and management. Such a program should include combinations of loans, grants, training, counseling, and technical assistance. It should be closely coordinated with programs to provide off-farm part-time job opportunities to rural people, to assist farm cooperatives, and with other related activities indicated below.

2. Provide technical and financial assistance for farm operators' marketing and housing cooperatives in rural farm and nonfarm areas. Financial assistance should include long-term low-cost loans.

3. Improve and accelerate action to remove all racially discriminatory practices in the administering of Federal programs and other publicly and privately supported programs affecting the lives of rural residents. Among other steps, this should include employment of Negroes in responsible positions-- for example, as county agents, as well as on state and local advisory, planning, or action bodies established under Federal programs.

4. Provide intensive job training programs, directly tied to the new job opportunities stimulated by local and regional economic planning--such training to be accompanied by provision of adequate living income for trainees and their families.

5. Ensure that jobs created by local economic development programs are open to Negroes on an equal opportunity basis.

6. Provide part-time or off-season work opportunities in rural areas for farmers and hired farm workers, to supplement their incomes from agriculture. Such jobs, financed mainly by Federal, state, or local government funds, should provide socially useful work in such fields as area beautification, conservation, and public services.

7. Sharply upgrade the substandard conditions under which migratory workers and their families are employed, housed and educated by (a) improving government education, vocational training, health, and housing programs for migrants, such as those conducted under the Economic Opportunity Act; (b) strengthening labor standards legislation; (c) developing new institutions and practices to rationalize the job market and to provide year-round employment opportunities for seasonal farm workers; and (d) continuing the progress made in reducing the use of foreign farm workers on U.S. farms.

8. Facilitate the Economic and Social Adjustment of Rural Negroes Migrating to the City by (a) establishment of centers in rural surplus labor areas, with technical and financial assistance provided by the Federal Government and private institutions, to help potential migrants make advance arrangements for jobs and housing and to provide vocational and personal counseling for would-be migrants; (b) expanded county agent and home demonstration agent programs, in both rural and city areas, designed to help rural Negroes secure employment in cities and to cope with the transition from rural to urban life; and (c) development of reception facilities by local governments and community organizations in urban labor demand areas. These facilities should be equipped to help the rural in-migrant solve employment and housing problems; to make available to them the range of health, welfare and other urban services; and to provide temporary quarters (Halfway Houses, Youth Hostels) for youthful and adult migrants during the initial adjustment period.

Conflict with Metro Job Councils?

9. For the aged or physically disabled low-income farmer who cannot advantageously move to the city or take other steps to improve his economic security, provide a system of supplemental income payments which, combined with farm earnings, will yield a decent standard of family living.

10. Provide "Domestic Peace Corps" programs for rural residents in economically depressed areas, including expansion of the VISTA program, utilization of the proposed Teacher Corps, and other private and government approaches.

11. Provide for the establishment of permanent local or regional Rural Jobs Councils which will assist in implementing and reviewing programs initiated under the Rural Jobs Task Force.

III. DEVELOP A COMPREHENSIVE HUMAN RESOURCE PROGRAM TO SET GOALS, TO MEASURE PROGRESS, AND TO STRUCTURE THE ACTION UNDERTAKEN "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

Why the Recommendation is Needed

Effective action programs must be based on systematic planning which mobilizes all available resources, selects specific goals, and schedules the necessary activities in accordance with definite timetables and priorities. Moreover, the component parts of overall programs must be effectively coordinated to attain maximum impact. The recommendation for a Comprehensive Human Resources Program is intended to meet these requirements. It will provide a flexible basis for creative action; serve as a guide in developing new manpower, economic, or related legislation; help to alert local and national planners to emerging problems or trends; and provide guidelines for manpower program actions by business, organized labor, local and state governments, and other agencies.

The Program also is intended to insure that all relevant data on the characteristics, needs, employment, unemployment, training, and job opportunities of Negro workers are considered, that the experience of existing private and government manpower and economic programs is reviewed, and that the available information is translated into proposals for specific program activities. The intention is to develop carefully planned and coordinated steps, to structure training and job opportunities for Negroes, rather than adopt scattered, unrelated programs which have only limited, temporary impact.

The need for a Comprehensive Human Resources Plan is pointed up by recent experience in the Watts section of Los Angeles. After the riots, private and public groups went to Watts for the purpose of determining what programs were needed to eliminate Negro social and economic problems which, it was generally assumed, were causal factors underlying the riots. One of the immediate problems which confronted the groups was the absence of basic information on the Watts population, on factors influencing its labor status, on its access to jobs and training, and on the impact of private, local and state government, and Federal manpower and economic programs in the area. This information would have been more readily available if a Comprehensive Human Resources Program had been in existence.

Major thrust for implementation of the recommendation must come from the Federal Government, particularly the United States Department of Labor. However, a Comprehensive Human Resources Program in the final analysis strongly involves action in local areas. This includes the provision of basic planning information by local employers, labor unions, other community groups and governments; the proposal of new action and approaches; and the development and adjustment of local activities to take into account the guidelines of the national Program. In particular, Metropolitan Jobs Councils and Rural Jobs Councils should relate their plans and programs closely to the national-level Comprehensive Human Resource Program. (See Recommendations I and II above.)

What Should Be Done

1. The U.S. Department of Labor should assume leadership in developing and conducting an effective program for collecting and analyzing information on the number, characteristics, employment, unemployment, and job opportunities of Negro workers. This program should focus most heavily on the working age population of the 70-odd cities in which most urban Negroes are concentrated and on the 5 or 6 southern states in which most rural Negroes live. Data should Rec.

Burden of data gathering — some limits be obtained for both urban and rural areas, and on a neighborhood basis in areas of heavy unemployment and underemployment. The current gap in employment and unemployment statistics by race on an area basis should be promptly filled, and this information made available to help local agencies plan to meet their manpower needs.

2. The Department of Labor should develop and keep up-to-date a Human Resource Budget:

a. Identifying the number, types, and problems of Negro youths, unskilled workers, older workers, women, and other specific groups of the working age population in need of intensive manpower services;

b. Establishing specific goals and timetables for providing these services;

c. Determining the extent to which existing government and non-government programs can help meet the goals;

d. Indicating the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals;

e. Assigning definite priorities and targets for action by specific agencies.

3. The Human Resource Budget should include short and long run estimates of expected employment and unemployment by race, major industry, area, and occupation; estimates of the need for government action to supplement expected employment opportunities; and definite program plans for Federally financed public work or service employment opportunities in advance of serious manpower dislocations at the local or national level.

4. The Department of Labor should prepare periodic reports systematically evaluating the progress of Negroes in the job market and the effectiveness of government and nongovernment services in meeting the needs of the Negro working age population.

IV. DEVELOP GOVERNMENT FINANCED EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS ON PUBLIC WORKS AND SERVICES TO GUARANTEE THE AVAILABILITY OF JOBS TO ABLE WORKERS WHO CANNOT BE PLACED IN, OR PROMPTLY TRAINED FOR, REGULAR EMPLOYMENT

Why the Recommendation is Needed

Massive unemployment and underemployment in the Negro working age population requires the most urgent attention to prevent a worsening of social tensions, to eliminate the waste of human potential, and to lighten the heavy welfare burdens imposed on the community. We must not expect this problem to be eliminated automatically by the long-run competitive forces of the job market. Even in an economy approaching full employment, joblessness among Negroes will remain a persistent problem. The relatively low educational attainment and occupational skill levels of many Negro workers reduce their job opportunities in our increasingly complex and rapidly changing economy. Discriminatory employment practices also result in a persistent hard-core of joblessness in the Negro labor force.

Jobs must be provided without delay to solve the Negro unemployment crisis. And these jobs must be made available for Negroes at their existing level of skill attainment.

To meet this need, the Federal Government must assume responsibility for providing employment to workers who have been unable to find a productive place in the regular job market on their own. This employment must include the kinds of training and experience which are likely to increase the employability of the worker for regular jobs. The work experience, coupled with supportive services such as counseling, must be aimed at breaking the vicious cycle of poverty and dependence, and at upgrading the occupational structure of the Negro work force in line with current and expected future manpower requirements.

The tasks assigned to workers on a proposed government employment program, far from being "make work," are essential to fill the very real and pressing needs for public works and services that have accompanied population growth, urbanization, and increasing demands on the nation's physical resources. Workers employed on the proposed programs can make major contributions toward meeting the need for better housing, schools, hospitals, and parks in burgeoning urban communities. They can contribute to important conservation projects and to improvements in the appearance and safety of both towns and countryside. They can fill the large-scale shortage of subprofessional personnel in the fields of education, welfare, health, child care, and many other services.

What Should Be Done

1. The Federal government should develop and finance a program of guaranteed employment for able workers who cannot be placed in, or promptly trained for, regular employment. The work experience provided should help upgrade the worker's job skills and prepare him for regular employment.

To guide this program, an annual job budget should be developed in which short-run and long-run estimates of labor force, employment, and underemployment should be considered in relation to the whole range of the Nation's economic and social resources and needs, in order to develop goals and priorities on the numbers and location of workers and projects to be served. This job budget should be tied closely to the Comprehensive Human Resource Program (See Recommendation III).

2. A large-scale Federal financed public works program to provide jobs through the private sector should be undertaken immediately. Immediate targets should be in the major urban centers where Negro unemployment is most severe and in the southern states where most of the rural farm and nonfarm Negro population live. In addition, long-range blue prints for public works should be developed for emergency use to prevent national or local manpower dislocations such as sharp dips in employment. Priority should be given to public works which produce the greatest manpower requirements for the industries, types of workers, and areas most in need of jobs.

3. The Federal government, in cooperation with local and state governments, should undertake a large-scale program of employment in public services.

4. The President's Council of Economic Advisors should give leadership in developing these programs.

V. MOUNT COMPREHENSIVE YEAR-ROUND EMPLOYMENT, TRAINING, AND COUNSELING PROGRAMS FOR NEGRO YOUTH

Why the Recommendation is Needed

The shockingly high rate of unemployment among Negro youths--male and female, their unduly high rate of school drop-outs, and symptoms of social disorganization among some young residents of impoverished Negro ghettos are problems of paramount urgency. Most unemployed Negro teenagers and older youth lack the kind of work experience and work skills needed for successful adaptation to the job market. At the same time, jobs for unskilled young people are increasingly limited.

Because of their disadvantages in the job market, young Negroes need especially intensive vocational counseling to determine their best occupational prospects, and to plan the most effective educational and training programs tailored to their individual needs. Large numbers of them have yet to be convinced that employment opportunities are increasing and job restrictions are diminishing, particularly in skilled, technical, and white collar work. Those who have little reason to believe they will be successful in the job market need encouragement and counseling in seeking and applying for regular employment. Yet, programs to provide intensive counseling services for Negro youth are grossly inadequate.

What Should Be Done

1. A year-round youth job placement program comparable to the special summer program formalized in 1965 should be developed. Jobs must be generated for male and female Negro teenagers which utilize their present skills while preparing them with new and better skills for occupational advancement. The Metropolitan Jobs Councils and Rural Jobs Councils should play important roles in coordinating this program at local levels. (See Recommendations I and II). The Comprehensive Human Resource Program provides a vehicle for estimating annual job needs and for planning the implementation of the youth program. (See Recommendation III).

2. Counseling services for in-school youths should be vastly improved and expanded, making available skilled vocational advisers who are acquainted with the requirements of industry. A target of at least one counselor for every 100 youths should be set for schools in poverty areas. Public employment offices should expand their vocational counseling services in the schools.

3. Community organizations should supplement the counseling services of government with emphasis on the needs of disadvantaged youth with especially severe employment and training problems.

4. The Vice President's Task Force on Youth Motivation should be greatly expanded and utilized by community organizations to reach and motivate Negro youth. This program can be implemented in high schools and colleges most effectively. Initiative may be taken by local clubs, churches, and Parent Teachers Associations. College students should form their own task forces to initiate and implement the program in local high schools.*

5. High school vocational education programs should be expanded and strengthened in both urban and rural areas to train youths effectively

*The intention of the Vice President's Task Force on Youth Motivation is to provide a means whereby the unconvinced Negro youth may be convinced of the changes in job opportunities by witnessing and counseling with Negroes who have "succeeded" in jobs and occupations previously closed to the Negroes. The program is in its second year and has already proved to be a success.

for occupations in which employment opportunities are available. School systems should work closely with industry and labor unions to gear the training realistically to job requirements.

6. The Neighborhood Youth Corps, which provides paid work experience for needy in-school youth and for jobless out-of-school youth, should be made more effective by legislative action to (a) provide additional funds, (b) increase the eligible age limits from 16-21 to 14-24, and (c) assist the preparation of NYC "graduates" for jobs by facilitating their movement into occupational training courses under the Manpower Development and Training Act.

7. The Job Corps program for both young men and women should be expanded and continuously improved in the light of program experience.

Ending discrimination

VI. AFFIRMATIVE ACTIONS BY PRIVATE EMPLOYERS, LABOR ORGANIZATIONS, AND GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE MORE AND BETTER JOBS

Specialized efforts is a part of a general push for expanded jobs & suitable jobs

Why the Recommendation Is Needed

Affirmative action by both private and government employers, labor organizations and community groups is essential and urgent to generate more and better jobs for Negroes, insure access to existing jobs by Negro men and women, and to eliminate discrimination in employment and occupational advancement.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which prohibits discrimination by employers, labor unions, and employment agencies; Executive Order 11246, which requires affirmative action to insure equal employment opportunity by government contractors; state and local fair employment practice laws; recent rulings by the National Labor Relations Board; and the Plans for Progress program are all contributing to the achievement of more and better jobs not by merely penalizing discriminatory activity, but through positive action leading to equality of opportunity.

affirmative

Employers need to look, think, and act beyond simple nondiscrimination and pro forma or passive equal employment opportunity programs. Active and deliberate efforts to increase and improve jobs for Negroes are necessary. The Government itself needs to become a model employer in every respect and set the example for affirmative action. State and local governments should also become model employers. In addition, they should establish programs of contract compliance comparable to the Federal Government's Executive Order 11246.

all Civil Serv. Com.

Affirmative Action by Private Employers and Labor Unions

There is no affirmative action plan which will apply to all companies in all situations. Overcoming past traditions of discrimination and insuring the acceptance of equal employment opportunity will require great initiative and creative thinking. Management must devote as much thought and effort to this as it does to other major functions of administration.

Among things that need to be done are:

1. Positive communication to Negroes that barriers of exclusion have been removed. This should be done through both regular and Negro-oriented media, civic meetings, mass meetings, radio and television.

2. Encouraging Negroes to apply for all levels of employment.

3. Review of all qualifications standards and tests to insure that Negroes are not victims of unconscious bias and that standards are fair and objective.

4. Re-evaluation of all Negro employees and progression opportunities to guarantee access to jobs commensurate with ability. In some cases collective bargaining agreements will have to be revised to overcome discriminatory placement practices maintained by transfer and seniority stipulations.

5. Job opportunities in the skilled crafts for Negroes should be increased without delay by (a) actively recruiting Negroes into craft unions and (b) helping Negro youths to qualify for apprenticeship programs by establishing pre-apprenticeship training and by revising selection criteria to eliminate unnecessary barriers.

6. Policy statements on equal employment opportunities should be followed-up with (a) specific directions involving all levels of supervision; (b) a precise system of feedback and reporting covering recruiting, hiring, training, and upgrading in each department, division and field office; and (c) personal involvement by top management when progress is slow.

7. Lower levels of supervision should be evaluated on the results of equal employment opportunity activities in the same way they are evaluated on other areas of supervisory ability.

8. Particular effort should be exerted to locate Negroes in responsible management and policy positions as a visible example of policy; e.g., as supervisors and personnel officers.

9. Private companies should utilize suppliers and contractors who follow nondiscrimination policies.

10. Management should increase the use of institutional and on-the-job training programs to help Negro workers find employment and advance to more skilled jobs. Effective use of Metropolitan Human Resource Action Programs, referred to under Recommendation I, will help to identify and channel Negroes into MDTA and other government institutional and on-the-job training programs.

11. Firms with well-established management and operating know-how can cooperate with Negro-owned and operated businesses to provide training for management and others employed in Negro firms.

12. Job opportunities for Negroes should be expanded through the franchise system. Every major firm should have Negro-owned franchises in all major cities as well as in small cities and towns.

13. Local business leaders should assist in forming and work with local Metropolitan Jobs Councils (See Rcommendation I) and with other community organizations giving leadership to anti-discrimination and "Fair and full employment" programs.

Affirmative Action by Labor Unions

Organized labor, especially at the national level, has made significant contributions to the furthering of equal job opportunities. However, there are many localities in which some labor organizations have failed to take affirmative action commensurate with the problems faced by Negro job seekers. It is recommended, therefore, that national, regional, and local unions review and revise union regulations, programs, and practices which have the effect of hampering access of Negroes to jobs and job training.

Affirmative Action by Community Organizations

Churches, educational institutions, health and welfare groups, and associations can undertake affirmative action through technical assistance and through the example of their own practices. These institutions have already proved to be effective instruments to bring about change in employment patterns. However, much of the work is confined to the national level. We recommend that churches, educational institutions and health and welfare groups undertake programs to:

1. Provide technical assistance to persuade and help local institutions and affiliates to eliminate discriminatory patterns.

2. Utilize only suppliers and contractors who adhere to nondiscrimination policies. An example in this respect is "Project Equality," sponsored by the National Catholic Conference for Interracial Justice. (This project is described in Appendix A).

Action Required by Federal Government

1. Title VII (Prohibition of Discrimination by Employers, Unions, and Employment Agencies) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, should be strengthened by amending it to:

Rec legis.

a. Expand coverage to employees of state and local governments, private membership clubs, educational institutions, and employers and unions with eight or more employees or members.

b. Authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to issue "cease and desist" orders.

c. Authorize the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission to order back pay to persons suffering financial loss through denial of equal employment opportunity.

2. Government contracting authority should be utilized to arrange and encourage new training opportunities in connection with Government contracts.

3. Technical assistance and educational programs should be greatly expanded to help employers, labor unions, and others develop capabilities for providing equal employment opportunities and to reduce employment prejudice and discrimination.

4. Training of Federal, state and local staffs, and present and potential staff members of local and national community organizations should be expanded to inform them of Federal requirements and to provide guidelines and methods for eliminating discrimination and implementing affirmative action programs.

5. An effective means for employers and labor unions to exchange information on their experience in attacking discriminatory practices should be provided.

VII. INITIATE AND REINFORCE SUPPORTIVE SERVICES TO FACILITATE MOVEMENT OF NEGROES INTO JOBS

Why the Recommendation Is Needed

Discrimination, high rates of unemployment and underemployment, relegation to low-skill jobs, and poverty have left their mark on the Negro labor force. A relatively high proportion of Negro workers lack the educational attainment and occupational skills needed to compete for many of the jobs in today's increasingly complex economy. This is especially true of white collar and technical jobs. The problem is made more severe by the migration of hundreds of thousands of Negroes from rural to urban areas, often without the kinds of vocational skills demanded for nonfarm work, and often lacking adequate knowledge of city life and services. Many of these people were persuaded to move to cities by employers and city officials during periods of labor shortage, such as World War II, and they have suffered substantial unemployment and underemployment in subsequent periods of reduced manpower requirements.

There is a crucial need to make available occupational training and related basic and remedial education to help prepare jobless Negroes for employment. There is also a need for training to upgrade employed Negroes who are working below their skill potentials. In many cases, existing training or educational programs are of inadequate size, inconveniently located, and not geared to the needs of disadvantaged groups. On-the-job training by employers has also been relatively limited for Negroes.

Formal training is not enough to assist Negroes at the lower end of the economic scale. They often require a variety of supportive services to ease their adjustment to the demands of the job market. They need supportive community services such as child care centers for working mothers and specialized help involving health, family, housing, and welfare problems which interfere with their success at seeking and holding jobs. Those who migrate from the countryside to the city often need help in adjusting to their new environment. Many disadvantaged people require counseling and related services to develop effective work, job seeking, and human relations attitudes and behavior patterns. It is very important, also, to facilitate access to jobs by Negroes, introducing new concepts of urban transportation for this purpose.

This set of recommendations covers training programs and supportive services to meet such urgent needs. It includes steps to strengthen government services, as well as to utilize the facilities and experience of nongovernment organizations. Special attention is given to the public employment service, which should be a key agency in this field.

What Should Be Done

1. There is a need to Federalize the public employment service, which currently is operated by state agencies, although financed entirely by Federal funds. The reasons for this recommendation include:

Rec Legislation

a. A national system to bring together jobs and job applicants without regard to local boundaries is needed to keep pace with today's complex job market. This system must be available to handle rapid shifts in manpower requirements, such as those caused by technological change and changes in defense needs. It is needed to give maximum mobility to the work force, to utilize unemployed workers in depressed areas, and to meet manpower shortages which are currently on the increase. A Federalized employment service is in a position to effectively deal with the continuing large-scale movement of rural people to urban areas, and other inter-regional migration patterns which have received little or no government services in the past. Furthermore, for an increasing number of occupations, such as engineering and other professional and technical jobs, the labor market is actually a national one.

b. Federalization is needed to strengthen program standards, to eliminate discrimination in referral of applicants to jobs, and to raise the quality of services, such as intensive counseling, furnished to applicants.

c. To an increasing extent, public employment service offices have been called upon to administer Federal manpower programs. As they assume functions such as the selection of enrollees for the Neighborhood Youth Corps, the Job Corps, and the MDTA, the need for Federal coordination to insure high standards, nondiscrimination, and uniformity has increased.

d. A Federal system would greatly improve employment service personnel standards. It would create a career ladder at an adequate and unified salary scale, promoting the interchange of staff members among local, state, and Federal levels. It would guard against discrimination in the selection of employment service staff members.

2. Access of Negro workers to all available jobs in the community must be improved. The location of most Negro workers in segregated ghettos sharply reduces not only their physical access to jobs in the community but often prevents them from knowing of the range of existing jobs, as is typical of most urban areas--North and South--investigations revealed that many workers in the Watts area had to travel for two hours, transfer to several bus lines, and pay a half-dollar each way to commute to jobs or to visit employment offices in search of a job. Relatively few can afford to own private cars. These transportation difficulties discourage job seekers and impose unfair costs on workers least able to meet them. Lack of child care services impedes the employment of women at a distance from their homes. The problem is aggravated by the growing trend of locating new business and government establishments in distant suburban areas. It is recommended that:

a. The Federal Government should locate new Federal facilities in places readily accessible to residental areas where Negroes live.

b. In awarding government contracts, the Federal Government should require, to the maximum practicable extent, that the work be performed in establishments accessible to areas with substantial Negro unemployment problems.

c. Unless there are compelling business reasons to the contrary, new business establishments should be located by private employers in areas accessible to places where Negroes live, such as downtown areas, rather than in distant suburban or other out-of-the-way sites.

d. Local and state governments should evaluate and modify local transportation routes, fares, and facilities to improve the access of Negroes to available jobs.

3. An individualized approach to disadvantaged workers should be adopted to meet the especially difficult employment and training needs of the hard-core unemployed. This should include establishment of Human Resource Development Centers in major cities where workers with especially severe unemployment problems can receive intensive and individualized assistance such as diagnosis of needs; intensive and prolonged counseling; referral to health, welfare, or other services; referral to training; specialized job placement assistance; and continuing contact with counselors to solve human relations and other problems which may interfere with performance on the job. (See Recommendation I.)

4. The effectiveness of programs for training unemployed and underemployed workers under the Manpower Development and Training Act should be increased by (a) liberalizing the recruitment, testing, and selection process to include more Negro trainees, (b) expanding remedial education, counseling, and other supportive services to improve the employability and training qualifications of disadvantaged workers, (c) increased participation by employers, labor unions, and local governments in establishing MDTA on-the-job training programs to help Negro workers qualify for employment and advancement, (d) liberalizing the weekly living allowances paid to trainees, and (e) "streamlining" administrative procedures.

VIII. STRENGTHEN INCOME MAINTENANCE AND LABOR STANDARDS PROGRAMS

Why the Recommendation Is Needed

The strengthening of income maintenance and labor standards programs is of special importance for Negroes, who are heavily concentrated in occupations and industries which pay low wages, provide only intermittent employment, and are excluded from protective labor standards legislation. For example, extension of minimum wage laws, unemployment insurance, workmen's compensation, and laws protecting the right to join labor unions to currently excluded agricultural and service workers would greatly contribute to the economic security of large numbers of Negro workers. Such protection would help to raise incomes to adequate levels and would reduce the dependence of impoverished Negroes on public assistance. Improved labor standards and income safeguards would also help to provide the Negro work force with the security needed to motivate workers to develop their skills, actively seek employment, and make their maximum contribution in the job market.

What Should Be Done

1. Federal minimum wage and child labor standards should be improved by:

a. Expanding coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act to currently excluded industries and occupations in which minority groups are heavily concentrated, e.g., service and agricultural jobs.

b. Increasing the minimum wage. Provide for adjustment programs to help disemployed workers obtain gainful employment.

c. Prohibiting child labor outside of school hours on farms other than those operated by the child's own family.

2. The protection and benefits of collective bargaining should be extended to occupations and industries in which Negroes are concentrated by:

a. Extending the protection of the Labor-Management Relations Act to currently excluded workers and industries; e.g., agriculture.

b. Insuring, through state laws and programs, protection of collective bargaining rights for workers excluded from the Labor-Management Relations Act.

c. Intensifying efforts to organize workers in service, agricultural, and other occupations in which Negroes are heavily concentrated.

3. The low-paid, low-status occupations in which large numbers of Negroes are employed, e.g., household service, should be upgraded by developing occupational standards, providing training programs, and developing new job market practices to provide steady employment, economic security, and decent "fringe benefits."

attempts to break down idea that poor are so because of moral flaw — a that situation requires special negative incentives — accepts that many struggling folks — attempting to perform — or desirous of by regulations — residual, earnings, pressure of relatives in family, etc

IX. RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED WELFARE PROGRAMS TO PROVIDE CONSTRUCTIVE BENEFITS TO THE POOR

Why the Recommendation is Needed

Welfare programs as they are presently operated fall far short of providing an adequate living to the poor. Even when the resources and facilities of the "War on Poverty" authorized by the Economic Opportunity Act are included, the Nation's welfare programs fail to provide welfare recipients and other impoverished people with maximum opportunity to move from dependency to self-sustaining employment.

The annual income available to families under the Aid to Families with Dependent Children Program only averages about $1.15 per day per person for all of the costs of living. Aged and disabled recipients of public assistance have only between $900 and $1,000 a year and blind recipients have slightly over $1,100 a year.

In addition to low cash payments, the provision of services by public assistance agencies to help poor people overcome the barriers to self-sufficiency is also limited. The "War on Poverty" has introduced imaginative approaches aimed at eradicating basic causes of poverty, but these programs require further experience, testing, and expansion before they can achieve major breakthroughs in eliminating the large-scale, deep-rooted problems of the Negro urban and rural ghetto. Widespread shortages of trained staff members add to this problem.

Both Federal and state public assistance laws impose eligibility conditions that deny help to some needy people. The most important group excluded from coverage under Federal law are families with children in which the parent or parents are employed but whose earnings do not provide even a meager living. More than half of the children among the poor are thus excluded from eligibility for Federally aided public assistance. Also excluded are persons nearly but not yet 65 and young and middle-aged couples or individuals who are not blind or disabled and who have no minor children. Requirements for a specified length of residence and special requirements that exclude some families with children that are headed by women also result in many needy persons not receiving aid.

The limitations of existing programs bear particularly heavily on Negroes. More heads of households in the nonwhite than the white population work part-time or for only part of the year. Negro earnings are lower than whites. The proportion of nonwhite families headed by women is almost two and one-half times the corresponding proportion of white families. The risk of poverty among children in nonwhite families headed by employed women is about two and one-half times that of white children in such families. Finally, the southern states have conspicuous difficulty in financing adequate assistance programs, even with a relatively high tax effort for public services. Since half of the total number of nonwhite poor people and only about one-third of all white poor people live in the South, this situation adversely affects Negro families.

What Should Be Done

1. The Federal Government should establish national standards for the level of public assistance benefits paid by the states, raising benefits to furnish a standard of living compatible with health and decency.

2. High priority in setting national standards should be given to eliminating the separate categories of public assistance and substituting a single category based exclusively on need, to insure the availability of public assistance to all impoverished people.

3. Legislation should be enacted to permit operation of public welfare programs by the Federal Government in states which cannot or will not meet Federal standards.

4. Under existing programs, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children should be strengthened to grant assistance to otherwise eligible families in cases where there is an employable male present in the household, provided that he is making reasonable efforts to secure or train for a job.

5. Residence requirements for public assistance should be reduced or eliminated or the states should be reimbursed for payments to non-residents.

6. Public assistance recipients should be given every opportunity and encouraged to seek and take jobs and training. The amount of earnings or training allowances which can be retained by public assistance recipients without impairing their benefits should be substantially increased.

Teenagers should be permitted to keep a substantial proportion of their earnings from jobs or their MDTA or NYC training allowances when assessing the welfare needs of recipient families.

7. Standards and additional resources should be provided for state and local governments and community organizations to make available supplemental non-monetary services to needy people, to strike at the basic causes of poverty. These services should include: consumer education, legal assistance, vocational and personal counseling, health information, home management services, free family planning services, day care centers for working mothers, and expanded school lunch programs. Services provided by public assistance agencies should be closely coordinated with those available under "War on Poverty" programs, to avoid duplication and achieve maximum coverage and impact.

8. The acute staffing problem of public assistance agencies must be relieved by such measures as (a) developing and providing resources for a greatly expanded program of recruitment and training of professional case workers. There should be a sharp reduction of the number of clients served by each case worker--a target of no more than 60 clients per worker should be achieved; (b) development of large-scale programs to train subprofessional aides to reduce the burden on the professional staff by handling routine tasks, serving as "expediters" to locate and inform poor people about available programs, and following-up the progress of public assistance recipients in utilizing available services and self-improvement programs.

9. Federal agencies administering programs of Federal assistance that depend upon development, proposal, and operation of projects by local agencies (e.g., the Community Action Program of the Economic Opportunity Act and economic development programs under the Public Works and Economic Development Act of 1965) should review administrative controls and intensify technical assistance activities to insure that their benefits reach even the least sophisticated and poorest rural and urban communities.

10. The resources of "War on Poverty" programs authorized under the Economic Opportunity Act should be expanded and creative new programs should continue to be developed and tested. Prompt attention should be given to strengthening the administrative procedures of these programs. This should include careful program controls, expanded technical assistance and supervision for local projects by the Office of Economic Opportunity and other administering agencies, and longer-range planning to maximize program effectiveness.

11. There should be explicit acceptance of the government's responsibility for guaranteeing a minimum income to all Americans. This involves (a) making available "last-resort employment" to those willing and able to work but who cannot find jobs, and (b) utilizing an improved public assistance system to provide income to needy persons who are unable to seek employment because of age, physical or mental disability, family responsibilities or other reasons; and who are not adequately protected by social insurance programs.

Appendix A

DESCRIPTION OF "PROJECT EQUALITY"

"Project Equality" is a national program in which participating religious institutions (Roman Catholic, Orthodox, Jewish, and Protestant denominations) use their hiring and purchasing power to promote affirmative action for equal employment opportunity. The program is similar to government action under Executive Order 11246. Employment practices within the institutions, their schools and hospitals, as well as that of suppliers and contractors are covered.

The principal elements are:

1. Each participating religious institution agrees to adopt and implement nondiscriminatory and affirmative action programs to insure that applicants are hired and that employees are placed, trained, promoted and otherwise treated during employment without regard to race.

2. Each employer who wishes to become eligible for contracts or purchase orders forwards to the Project Equality staff in his location a standard "employment analysis" form containing three kinds of information.

   a. A breakdown of work force by race and job category.

   b. A list of affirmative actions taken to eliminate discrimination and insure equal employment opportunity.

   c. A statement as to the problems encountered in recruiting minority persons for employment.

3. The contract staff within the Project Equality area compiles a list of eligible firms.

4. Project Equality members within the area pledge to do business only with eligible firms on the list.

5. On the basis of work force and problem information contained in the completed "employment analysis" reports, Project Equality staff members conduct compliance reviews of firms on the eligible list to insure that nondiscriminatory and affirmative actions are being implemented and are achieving successful results.

The program began in May 1965, and now operates in several major cities (Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, Hartford, San Antonio). Total purchasing power committed to the program is well over a half billion dollars annually. The goal is to establish programs by 1967 in each major city in which there are significant numbers of nonwhites.

Another organization exploring this type of program is the national board of the YWCA. Others could include:

1. Educational institutions
2. Hospitals
3. Mass media industries
4. The advertising industry
5. Civic organizations
6. Financial institutions

CONCLUSION

> No amount of legislation, no degree of commitment on the part of the national government, can by itself bring equal opportunity and achievement to Negro Americans. It must be joined by a massive effort on the part of the States and local government, of industry, and of all citizens, white and Negro.
>
> --From the President's Message to Congress, April 28, 1966

No single document can anticipate the views of as large a cross section of American life as is represented at this White House Conference.

In submitting this Report to the Conference, the Council has identified problem areas which deserve priority attention. It has concentrated its action recommendations on programs offering the greatest promise of success in eliminating barriers that prevent the Negro's full participation in our society.

As you discuss these subjects, we look to you for more ideas and new approaches, for firsthand reports on constructive programs which have worked in your community, business, or agency.

This Conference should mark the beginning of a more meaningful dialog in every home, neighborhood, union hall, place of business, organization meeting, state house, and city hall -- as well as here in Washington.

The time has passed when we can afford the luxury of limiting ourselves to studying and discussing "the problem."

The business of these meetings is to chart a course of action, to stimulate the massive national effort called for by the President.

We will not ask you to issue findings, pass resolutions, or make a final judgment on proposals or priorities. Every idea discussed will be studied with care by the Council before it makes its Report to the President.

At the same time, we ask that you also listen. Many of the proposals made, the experiences shared, will demonstrate what you can do in your own community. There is no reason for delay before you translate the best of these approaches into action.

In our diverse society it is the citizen who leads. It is to this mobilization of spirit, commitment, and resources that we must address ourselves.

That is why we are here.

In convening this Conference, the President said that "its object will be to help the American Negro fulfill the rights which, after the long time of injustice, he is finally about to secure."

We will need new Federal legislation and more executive action. Every section of this Report deals with these needs as well as the necessity for better enforcement of present laws and more realistic funding.

There is no question that much remains to be accomplished by our national government.

But these recommendations should not blind us to a central issue. It is that the national government's response to the compelling cry of the Negro American for justice and true equality has not been matched by state and local government, by business and labor, the housing industry, educational institutions, and the wide spectrum of voluntary organizations who, through united effort, have the power to improve our society.

In the struggle for equality, we must now move to new and different battlefields in every city and its suburbs, in rural areas, and in every state.

Only you and your organizations and institutions can make this come to pass. Each of us has a role to play.

State and local governments should recognize the need to recapture the initiative and leadership they have lost by inaction. It is not enough to wait for Federal action and Federal funds, although these are essential and are becoming increasingly available. They must be stimulated to act on the many roadblocks which only they can clear in housing, education, health, welfare, the administration of justice, and economic security.

Legislators and administrators in every branch of state and local government must recognize the crisis they face in the nation's drive for equality. They should proceed to implement the recommendations in this Report.

In the private sector, more affirmative action is needed from businessmen, industrialists, and financiers. Though many of the larger corporations are working to develop local merit employment councils, vocational and counseling services, and motivational programs, most local business has not yet seen the stake it has in racial progress.

The business community must improve its communication with Negro Americans. Affirmative action programs should be agenda item number one for every employer, every trade association, and every local chamber of commerce.

Organized labor has a responsibility to translate its national support for civil rights into more decisive action by international and local unions. There is a need to make seniority more flexible, widen the doors of apprenticeship training, and renegotiate discriminatory contracts. Many unions can best demonstrate their commitment to equality by promoting qualified Negro members to responsible positions.

Every segment of the housing industry needs to join in a serious reappraisal of the role housing now plays in impeding racial progress. Builders, investors, union officials, economists, and public officials must join hands in closing the gap between incomes and housing costs. Their support is imperative in the fight for open, racially unrestricted housing in suburban areas as well as the central city.

Similarly, quality education for all will never become a fact without a greater commitment by teachers and administrators, school boards, and state and local officials. Innovation is essential in eliminating racial concentrations, improving teacher training and textbooks, and bringing about a greater interdependence among the educational units within our metropolitan areas.

Every one of us has a job to do in providing support for greater educational opportunity for all children and in improving the dialog between the schools and the community.

In the area of individual citizen and organization action, those identified with civil rights, religious, and labor organizations have played the major role thus far in awakening the nation's conscience and in supporting positive action.

But to accomplish our goal new allies must be found. Leadership must now include the representatives of local business, labor unions, civic and veterans associations, neighborhood groups, and other components of our diverse society in villages as well as cities, including organizations of men, women and youth.

Negroes and other minorities have a crucial role to play in this battle for true equality. As the gates of opportunity are opened, all who have been denied must seek to improve their education, housing and employment. Opportunities for leadership must be sought in elective and appointive office; in trade, professional and civic organizations; in business firms and labor unions. The Negro American needs to recognize his responsibility for affirmative action by becoming totally involved in every level of our society.

The target for citizen action should be to support and stimulate meaningful advancement on all of the fronts covered in these recommendations.

To the battles in the courts and in Congress a new dimension should be added -- state legislatures, city councils, and the executive agencies of both.

But more than lip service is needed today. Every organization, institution, and agency can make a contribution by using its hiring and purchasing power to promote affirmative action. This direct involvement could produce immediate and beneficial results in every community.

In this civic mobilization, the need for a better informed public is imperative. It is not enough to talk about civil rights. Commitment to change can only be secured through a massive public education program. In this effort, we call upon the nation's press and broadcasters for advice and support.

The Council believes that the massive effort required to bring equal opportunity and achievement to Negro Americans will require the active partnership of every segment of our nation. Only by coordinated planning and direction can we hope to achieve the maximum effort which will be required by existing institutions and organizations.

We must find a better way for the varied interests represented here to pool their knowledge, energy, and influence. Without this catalyst, we may find that everyone's business has become no one's business.

Existing Federal agencies could make a valuable contribution to this dialog between and among all private and public groups across the country. There is need for better Federal interagency planning and coordination of programs as they affect local communities and organizations.

Among the Federal agencies which should be more directly involved in this follow up are the Civil Rights Commission, with its network of state advisory councils and clearing house responsibilities; the Community Relations Service, which works at the community level; the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission; the Departments of Labor; Commerce; Housing and Urban Development; Health, Education and Welfare; and others.

America has demonstrated many times the ability of its citizens to respond to challenge, to join forces in a common cause.

What is needed is a full understanding of the issues, a sense of commitment, a determination to find solutions.

There will be disagreement on methods some of us use to accomplish our common goal. But dissent, and the variety of approaches we use, can provide strength to the massive public and private effort that will be required if we, as a nation, are to "Fulfill These Rights."

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

May 27, 1966

MEMORANDUM TO CHAIRMEN AND RESOURCE PEOPLE

In many ways the main business of the Conference will center in the discussions of the twelve committees. Each committee will consist of approximately 200 participants and will meet for four three-hour sessions. Each participant will be assigned to a specific committee upon registration. He will be expected to meet with that group for all four of its sessions, in the course of which he will be exposed to each of the major agenda subjects -- Economic Security and Welfare, Education, Housing, Administration of Justice, and other concerns.

Each committee will have a permanent chairman; teams of resource people in each subject area will circulate among the committees, so that each group will discuss each subject.

Following are some observations on the conduct of these sessions for the guidance of the permanent chairman of each committee and the resource persons who will present and discuss the several sections of the Council's Report.

Chairman's Opening Remarks (Outline attached)

At the beginning of the first discussion session, the committee chairman should review the schedule and procedures of the committee. Among the points to be made are:

1. The format and rules of the Conference were planned by the Council in order to permit maximum participation by the more than 2,000 conferees. Within the limitations of time and numbers, every participant and every viewpoint will be given a full hearing. The chairman should inform the conferees at the outset that no person should speak until he has been recognized and stated his name and city, that all statements must be pertinent to the subject under discussion and should be kept brief, and that the chair's rulings on these points must be strictly observed.

2. Each discussion will be recorded verbatim and transcribed immediately after each session. Thus all of the views expressed will be available for careful review and reflection in the subsequent report to the President.

3. There will be no voting on proposals, no resolutions, no formal action of any kind in the committees or the general sessions. There may be objections to this policy; if so, the reasons for it should be fully explained. Basically these are that the time is too short, the Conference too large, and the proposals too many for parliamentary procedures to be practicable. If every recommendation in the Council's Report, to say nothing of others introduced from the floor, were formally acted upon, the Conference could hardly begin to deal with the issues and proposals placed before it. The participants must accept the assurance of the Council and Conference staff that the views of the conferees, as recorded and transcribed, will be accurately and fully represented in the Conference report.

4. The resource persons were selected for their knowledge of the subject matter, but the material they were asked to present represents the views of the Council and may not in every case coincide with their personal views. In short, the resource persons should not be looked upon as originating, or even necessarily subscribing to the recommendations they present and discuss.

5. No posters, signs, or other non-conference materials are to be displayed in the committee rooms. (If such material should be displayed, the ushers should first request the person responsible to remove it and then, if necessary, remove it themselves.)

6. Time does not permit the reading of papers or prepared statements. Conferees may give a brief oral summary of such papers and submit the full text to the stenotypist for inclusion in the record.

Chairing the Sessions

1. The Council's recommendations are of two broadly differing types: (a) actions to be taken by the Federal, state, and local governments, large institutions, organizations, and business corporations; and (b) actions of an essentially local nature, in which private individuals and their community groups can take the initiative in meaningful efforts. While large-scale programs of the first type are essential and are fully dealt with in the Report, it would defeat a major purpose of the Conference if the participants dwelt on them to the exclusion of voluntary and local efforts. The chairmen should use all of their tact and skill to see that both types of recommendation are seriously discussed.

2. If everyone who wishes to be heard on a given subject is to have that opportunity, it will likely be necessary to put some limitation on the length of individual statements from the floor, discussion of a given issue or recommendation, and the number of times any one person may speak. Since the success of such limitations will depend wholly on the tact and firmness of the chairmen, these matters will be left generally to their judgment. It is suggested, however, that lengthy statements or overlong discussion of a topic be cut short with the promise that they can be completed later in the session if time permits. In the interest of fairness to all participants, the chairman should not hesitate to interrupt garrulous speakers.

3. Attached is a copy of the guidelines that will be distributed to representatives of the press at the Conference. The chairmen should familiarize themselves with these rules, especially those pertaining to press coverage of the committee sessions, and see that they are observed in the committee room.

4. In the unlikely event of any serious threat to good order in the committee sessions, arrangements have been made for assistance to be available promptly on call of the chairman. The details of these arrangements will be explained to the chairmen in person.

Role of Resource Persons

1. Resource persons will be organized by subject matter into teams of approximately five. The teams will rotate among the committees in the order prescribed. Each team will be responsible for four three-hour discussion periods over the two days of the Conference.

2. Only one presentation will be made in each committee session. The team member designated to do so will give a summary of the main points and recommendations in the appropriate section of the Council's Report. His presentation should be as concise as possible, preferably no longer than 15 to 20 minutes.

5-7 minutes or 15-20

3. The supporting resource persons will not make presentations or opening remarks. They will assist the principal discussant as necessary in answering questions about the recommendations, explaining the background of them, giving the reasons for them, and so on. Since time for reactions from the conferees is at a premium, all such comments should be kept as brief as possible.

4. The chairmen and resource persons should bear in mind that their primary job is to present and explain the Council's Report and recommendations, as a basis for eliciting the reactions and views of the conferees. While the conferees' discussion is not to be limited to the contents of the Report -- they are free to make additional proposals -- the resource persons are reminded that their responsibility is to see that there is full presentation, understanding, and discussion of the Council's recommendations to the Conference. Obviously, all resource persons should thoroughly study the Report and its recommendations in their field in advance of the Conference.

Attachment

Outline of Points to be Covered in Committee Chairman's Opening Remarks

1. Schedule and procedures of committee:

   a. Each conferee to meet with his assigned committee, in same room, for all four discussion sessions. (Refer to Program.)

   b. Each committee to discuss every agenda subject, aided by circulating teams of resource persons.

   c. Conferees to consider and discuss Council's recommendations, but may also suggest revised or additional proposals on each subject as it is discussed.

2. Maximum participation requires that each conferee:

   a. be recognized by chairman;

   b. state his name and home city;

   c. be brief (e.g., 2 or 3 minutes);

   d. be relevant to subject under discussion;

   e. give others a chance to be heard before seeking recognition again;

   f. observe all rulings of the chair.

3. Discussions to be transcribed verbatim and fully reviewed for report to the President.

4. No resolutions or voting because of number of conferees to be heard and proposals to be covered in limited time.

5. Resource persons will present the Council's report, not their personal views.

6. No display of non-conference materials in committee rooms.

7. Papers and reports may not be read, but may be briefly summarized and submitted for the record.

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

R. W. McFALL
PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is LOCAL TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is LOCAL TIME at point of destination

DUPLICATE OF TELEPHONED TELEGRAM

126A EST MAY 29 66 AA033 PA038
P WWY807 WWZ9 WWZ9 PD WASHINGTON DC 28 NFT
EMORY F VIA 5 FORSYTH ST NW 5 Floor FIFTH FLOOR
~~[illegible]~~ ATLA (T)
THERE WILL BE A MEETING OF RESOURCE PEOPLE FOR THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS" ON TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1:00 P.M., ASSEMBLY ROOM, SHERATON PARK HOTEL. LOOK FORWARD TO SEEING YOU
EDWARD C SYLVESTER JR VICE CHAIRMAN.

ADD
LW-904A ~~[illegible]~~ Amd
DELIVER AM 636-5829

SF1201(R2-65) LW Dec 3 Bu

CLASS OF SERVICE
This is a fast message unless its deferred character is indicated by the proper symbol.

WESTERN UNION TELEGRAM

W. P. MARSHALL
CHAIRMAN OF THE BOARD

R. W. McFALL
PRESIDENT

SYMBOLS
DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LT = International Letter Telegram

The filing time shown in the date line on domestic telegrams is LOCAL TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is LOCAL TIME at point of destination

412A EST MAY 30 66 AA051 PA049
P WWY167 WWZ2 WWZ2 GOVT NL PD WASHINGTON DC 29
EMORY F VIA, SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL INC
5 FORSYTH ST NORTHWEST ATLA
ACCOMMODATIONS REQUESTED CONFIRMED AT SHERATON PARK HOTEL PRESENT THIS TELEGRAM AT HOTEL UPON ARRIVAL JULIA T CELLINI DIRECTOR CONFERENCE ARRANGEMENTS WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS".

SF1201(R2-65)

D- 87213

D- 87933

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

May 31, 1966

MEMORANDUM FOR CONFEREES

We hope that the following will provide you with all the information you need. If you need any further information or assistance, members of the staff will be on hand to assist you.

TICKETS FOR THE CONFERENCE

At the time you registered for the Conference you were given a book of tickets. The tickets assigned to you are numbered and have a line for your signature. Please sign all tickets immediately. These tickets are not transferrable and must be presented at the door of each meeting room and other function.

If a book of tickets -- or a ticket -- is lost, please report the loss immediately to the Conference Registration Desk.

BADGES

Every conferee was issued a badge at the time of registration. It is requested that your badge be worn throughout the Conference. Persons without badges will not be admitted to the meetings or functions.

INFORMATION DESK

An Information Desk is located in the Concourse of States, Sheraton Park Hotel, and in the Main Lobby of the Shoreham Hotel. Staff is assigned there to answer questions. The Information Desk will also serve as a point for leaving and receiving messages. Conferees should check at these locations for messages during the Conference.

BUS SERVICE

Bus service will be provided from the Sheraton Park Hotel to the Shoreham Hotel for conferees of Committees meeting in the Shoreham Hotel immediately after the opening session. It is requested that those holding Committee assignments at the Shoreham Hotel go promptly to the front entrance of the Sheraton Park Hotel where the buses will be waiting so that the first Committee meeting may start on time. Your registration kit includes a schedule of bus transportation between hotels.

RECEPTION

An informal reception will be held in Sheraton Hall, Sheraton Park Hotel, May 31st, from 6:30 to 8:00 p.m. This will afford conferees an opportunity to get acquainted before the Conference meetings begin.

OPENING MEETING

The Conference will open promptly at 9:00 a.m., Wednesday morning, June 1st, in Sheraton Hall, Sheraton Park Hotel. The Vice President will speak at this meeting and everyone must be seated by 9:00 a.m.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Each conferee has been assigned to a working committee and should remain with that Committee throughout the Conference. Each Committee will discuss the full agenda and have an opportunity to bring up other matters. You are urged to attend each Committee session. See your Program for the schedule of Committee sessions.

LUNCHEONS

Luncheons have been arranged for all participants on June 1st and June 2nd. Conferees of Committees I, II, III, IV, V, and VI will lunch in Sheraton Hall, the Sheraton Park Hotel. Conferees of Committees VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, and XII will lunch in the Regency Room of the Shoreham Hotel. There will be no formal program. Tickets for these functions are included in your book of tickets and must be presented at the door.

DINNER MEETINGS

A dinner meeting will be held in Sheraton Hall, Sheraton Park Hotel, June 1st at 8:00 p.m. The speaker will be the Honorable Thurgood Marshall, Solicitor General of the United States.

A dinner meeting will also be held in Sheraton Hall, Sheraton Park Hotel, June 2nd at 7:30 p.m., and will close the Conference.

LITERATURE ROOMS

A broad variety of literature related to the subject areas of the Conference has been assembled from government and private sources and is on display in the Potomac Lounge, Sheraton Park Hotel (just off main registration area) and the Heritage Room, Shoreham Hotel (off Lower Lobby).

A considerable amount of this literature is available for distribution. Information staff in the literature room will assist you to order other materials which could not be provided in quantity, and will endeavor to answer questions about specific programs discussed at the Conference.

EXHIBIT

A photo exhibit is on display in the Esplanade entrance to Sheraton Hall, the Sheraton Park Hotel, which dramatically portrays the conditions which this Conference is attempting to overcome.

REFRESHMENTS

Coffee will be available in each Committee room throughout the meetings through the courtesy of the National Coffee Association and the Pan American Coffee Bureau; Coca-Cola and other soft drinks will be available through the courtesy of the Coca-Cola Company.

HOTEL EXPENSES AND CHECK OUT TIME

For those wishing to leave Washington immediately after the final dinner session, arrangements have been made with the Hotels for a late check-out time of 7:00 p.m. Central storage for your luggage has been arranged and upon checking out the Hotel will assist you in placing your luggage in this area.

All hotel charges are to be paid by each Conferee. No expenses for hotel accommodations, room services, telephone calls, etc. are to be charged to the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights."

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

ADVANCE INFORMATION FOR THE CONFERENCE

CONFERENCE HEADQUARTERS

The SHERATON-PARK HOTEL, 2660 Woodley Road, N.W., at Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C., will be the Official Headquarters for The White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights" on Wednesday and Thursday, June 1 and 2, 1966.

INVITATIONS

The invitation from the President requested that a response be made within five days. It is important that the replies are returned within that time. The invitations are not transferrable. Please return the completed reply card to The White House immediately.

RECEPTION

A reception for the Conference participants will be held at Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel at 6:30 p.m., Tuesday, May 31, 1966.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS

Accommodations for participants of the Conference have been arranged and reservations will be made by the Conference staff. Hotels will not accept reservations directly.

A hotel reservation card indicating types and prices of accommodations is enclosed. Reservations will be made on a first-come, first-served basis. It is, therefore, requested that you select the type of accommodations you desire, indicate time of arrival and departure, and return the self-addressed card to us immediately. (Note: If a double or twin bedroom is requested and will be shared with another, please give name of person sharing room with you.) Participants will be responsible for all hotel charges.

Arrangements have been made with the hotels to permit the participants who desire to leave Washington immediately after the dinner to check out of their hotels as late as 7:00 p.m. on June 2. Unless check out is accomplished by this time, participants will be required to pay for an additional day.

MEALS

Arrangements have been made for two luncheons and two dinners—June 1 and 2. Cost of meals will be $25.00 per person. It is requested that you send your check or money order (do not send cash)—made out to The White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights"—to us with your acceptance. A receipt will be mailed you immediately.

CONFERENCE REGISTRATION

It is requested that all participants register at Conference Headquarters Registration Desk—Concourse of States Area—Sheraton-Park Hotel as soon as they arrive. Registration Desks will be open:

Tuesday, May 31st	10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.
Wednesday, June 1st	7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m.
Thursday, June 2nd	7:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m.

At time of registration, all participants will receive:

Identification badge to be worn throughout Conference
Book of tickets for all functions
Program, discussion papers, etc.

OTHER INFORMATION

Request for additional information regarding Conference may be sent to:

The White House Conference
"To Fulfill These Rights"
Room 1121
1800 G Street, N.W.
Washington, D. C. 20506

WHC

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS

PROGRAM

Registration — 10 AM

Tuesday, May 31

6:30 p.m.	RECEPTION Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

Wednesday, June 1

9:00 a.m.	OPENING MEETING Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel
10:45 a.m.	FIRST COMMITTEE MEETING - First Half
12:15 p.m.	LUNCHEON
1:45 p.m.	FIRST COMMITTEE MEETING - Second Half
3:30 p.m.	SECOND COMMITTEE MEETING
8:00 p.m.	DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

Thursday, June 2

9:00 a.m.	THIRD COMMITTEE MEETING
12:00 Noon	LUNCHEON
2:00 p.m.	FOURTH COMMITTEE MEETING
7:30 p.m.	FINAL DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

May 23, 1966

MEMORANDUM FOR CONFEREES
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

After thoughtful consideration the Council concluded that the White House Conference "To Fulfill These Rights" be conducted so that all participants will have ample opportunity to take part in the discussions of all agenda subjects. Listed below are the procedures set up to ensure maximum participation without losing time or moving around.

Each conferee will be assigned to a committee and should remain with that committee throughout the Conference. Each committee will discuss the full agenda and have a chance to bring up other matters. You are urged to attend all committee sessions.

In order to permit a full and free discussion, resolutions or votes will not be recorded. However, complete word-for-word records will be made of each discussion session.

There will be no formal events during the Conference and regular clothes will be suitable.

The enclosed Report and Recommendations of the Council to the Conference will be discussed.

You are reminded that only those actually invited will be able to attend the Conference activities. Conference registration begins at 10:00 a.m., May 31, 1966. An early registration is requested.

We look forward to a fruitful and constructive meeting.

Ben W. Heineman
Chairman

Enclosure

Emory F. Via

WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

PROGRAM

JUNE 1–2, 1966
WASHINGTON, D. C.

It is the glorious opportunity of this generation to end the one huge wrong of the American Nation and, in so doing, to find America for ourselves, with the same immense thrill of discovery which gripped those who first began to realize that here, at last, was a home for freedom.

—From Remarks of the President at Howard University, June 4, 1965

COUNCIL

Honorary Chairman: A. Philip Randolph

Chairman: Ben W. Heineman

Morris B. Abram
Hon. Edward T. Breathitt, Jr.
Dr. Jerome S. Bruner
William T. Coleman, Jr.
Stephen R. Currier
Dr. Allison Davis
John S. Gleason, Jr.
Eli Goldston
Courtlandt S. Gross
Dorothy I. Height
Rev. Theodore M. Hesburgh
Judge A. Leon Higginbotham, Jr.
Rafer Johnson
Vernon E. Jordan, Jr.
Dr. Martin Luther King
John Lewis
James A. Linen, III
Hon. Theodore R. McKeldin
Floyd McKissick
Dr. James G. Maddox
Burke Marshall
George Meany
G. William Miller
J. Irwin Miller
Joseph P. Molony
Dr. Robert W. Spike
Roy Wilkins
Whitney M. Young, Jr.

CONFERENCE OFFICERS

Edward C. Sylvester, Jr. —Vice Chairman
Rev. Walter E. Fauntroy —Vice Chairman
Berl I. Bernhard —Special Counsel
James E. Booker —Director of Information
Craig W. Christensen —Executive Assistant to the Chairman
Norman J. McKenzie —Executive Officer

ASSISTANTS TO CONFERENCE OFFICERS

David Apter —Assistant to Vice Chairman (Fauntroy)
Julia T. Cellini —Director, Conference Arrangements
Arthur B. McCaw —Budget and Administrative Officer
Azie T. Morton —Assistant to Vice Chairman (Sylvester)
Joan T. Thornell —Assistant to Special Counsel

SPECIAL CONSULTANTS

Harold C. Fleming
M. Carl Holman

SENIOR CONFERENCE STAFF ASSISTANTS

Edwin R. Bayley
John Christman
Ofield Dukes
Evelyn Idelson
Ronald B. Natalie
Hal Tufty

CONFERENCE STAFF

Edith M. Allen
Winnie Balmer
Mary Beebe
Joyce Bierman
Marilyn Blackburne
Marshall Bragdon
Hollis Butler
Eddie Campbell
Mary Crampton
Carrie E. Craven
Deanna Dettman
Shirley Foster
Hazel Fry
Marilyn Galvin
Helen M. Gearin
Morris Harris
Charlene Heidler
Joan Holliday
Earl Hunigan
David Kastner
Donna Jean Kelly
Christine Kushner
Harold Masters
Jean R. Oliver
Harriet K. Purvis
Sharon M. Roddy
Estella L. Sachs
Celeste Smallwood
Elizabeth Spencer
Sylvia Strong
Grace V. Teti
Constance Thomas
Cleveland M. Thompson
Ray Tucker
George Upshaw
Effie L. Watters
Melvin S. Yates

PROGRAM

Tuesday, May 31

10:00 a.m.-7:00 p.m. REGISTRATION
Concourse of States, Sheraton-Park Hotel

6:30 p.m.-8:00 p.m. RECEPTION—Informal
Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

Wednesday, June 1

7:30 a.m. REGISTRATION
Concourse of States, Sheraton-Park Hotel

9:00 a.m.-10:15 a.m. OPENING MEETING
Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

Welcome: A. Philip Randolph
Honorary Chairman

Introduction: Ben W. Heineman
Chairman

Address: The Vice President

Conference Procedures: Edward C. Sylvester, Jr.
Vice Chairman

*10:45 a.m.-12:00 Noon WORK SESSION

12:15 p.m.-1:15 p.m. LUNCH
(No formal ceremonies)

Wednesday, June 1 (cont'd)

* 1:45 p.m.-3:00 p.m.	WORK SESSION
* 3:30 p.m.-6:30 p.m.	WORK SESSION
8:00 p.m	DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel Address: Honorable Thurgood Marshall Solicitor General of the United States

Thursday, June 2

* 9:00 a.m.-12:00 Noon	WORK SESSION
12:00 Noon-1:00 p.m.	LUNCH (No formal ceremonies)
* 2:00 p.m.-5:00 p.m.	WORK SESSION
7:30 p.m.	FINAL DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

*See pages 6, 7, 8 and 9 for subjects to be discussed at each work session.

SCHEDULE OF SUBJECTS
AT THE SHERATON-PARK HOTEL

COMMITTEE

	I DELAWARE SUITE	II VIRGINIA SUITE	III MARYLAND SUITE
June 1
10:45-12:00 p.m.	Housing	Education	Economic Security & Welfare
1:45- 3:15 p.m.
3:30- 6:30 p.m.	Education	Housing	Administration of Justice & Other
June 2
9:00-12:00 Noon	Economic Security & Welfare	Administration of Justice & Other	Housing
2:00- 5:00 p.m.	Administration of Justice & Other	Economic Security & Welfare	Education

SCHEDULE OF SUBJECTS
AT THE
SHERATON-PARK HOTEL

	COMMITTEE IV CONTINENTAL ROOM	V SOUTH COTILLION ROOM	VI NORTH COTILLION ROOM
June 1
10:45-12:00 p.m.	Administration of Justice & Other	Education	Housing
1:45- 3:15 p.m.
3:30- 6:30 p.m.	Economic Security & Welfare	Housing	Education
June 2
9:00-12:00 Noon	Education	Economic Security & Welfare	Administration of Justice & Other
2:00- 5:00 p.m.		Administration of Justice & Other	Economic Security & Welfare

PERCY SUTTON B

Thur

B

G. William Miller

SCHEDULE OF SUBJECTS

AT THE

SHOREHAM HOTEL

	COMMITTEE
	VII	VIII	IX
	AMBASSADOR ROOM	EMPIRE ROOM	THE FORUM
June 1
10:45-12:00 p.m.	Administration of Justice & Other	Economic Security & Welfare	Housing
1:45- 3:15 p.m.
3:30- 6:30 p.m.	Economic Security & Welfare	Administration of Justice & Other	Education
June 2
9:00-12:00 Noon	Housing	Education	Economic Security & Welfare
2:00- 5:00 p.m.	Education	Housing	Administration of Justice & Other

SCHEDULE OF SUBJECTS

AT THE

SHOREHAM HOTEL

COMMITTEE

	X BLUE ROOM	XI PALLADIAN ROOM	XII TUDOR ROOM
June 1
10:45-12:00 p.m. 1:45- 3:15 p.m.	Education	Economic Security & Welfare	Administration of Justice & Other
3:30- 6:30 p.m.	Housing	Administration of Justice & Other	Economic Security & Welfare
June 2
9:00-12:00 Noon	Administration of Justice & Other	Housing	Education
2:00- 5:00 p.m.	Economic Security & Welfare	Education	Housing

GSA DC 66-18832

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
NEWS

1800 G Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20506—Tele: 737-9010

FACT SHEET

FOR NEWS MEDIA COVERING WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE

NEWS ROOM FACILITIES:

Location: Exhibit Hall #1 - Lower Concourse Level - Sheraton-Park Hotel

Hours: 8 A.M. to 10 P.M. Tuesday, May 31 through ~~Wednesday,~~ THURSDAY June 2

Credentials:

1. Press badges and information kits will be issued to all working newsmen on presentation of official press passes or letters of authorization from a publication or broadcast station, at press registration desk outside News Room.

2. Press badges must be shown for admission to Committee Meetings and other Conference sessions.

Coverage:

1. All meetings will be open to the press, but only one television crew will be allowed to set up equipment in each committee room. These allocations will be made by drawing lots. Cameramen are cautioned against any activity which might deter the normal course of discussions.

2. There will be a limited reserved press section in each committee room. Press tables will be provided at all general sessions and dinner meetings.

3. Notices of briefings by White House Conference officials will be posted in News Room.

4. Advance texts of main addresses will be made available as soon as possible.

5. Press pools are encouraged as a means of covering the concurrent meetings. A staff information officer will cover each committee meeting and short summaries will be available an hour after close of each meeting.

Services:

1. Adequate supply of typewriters and telephones.

2. Western Union machines and direct lines.

3. Press lounge.

4. A book of tickets for the dinner meetings will be provided at the time of registration.

Telephone Service:

Local Calls - No Charge
Long Distance - Credit Card or Reverse Charges Only Incoming Calls - 737-9010 (Press Room)

BROADCASTING FACILITIES:

Location:

Suite C-240 (Sheraton-Park) will be available for radio and television interviews.

Reservations:

A White House Conference staffer will be in Suite C-240 and will be responsible for booking these facilities on a first come, first serve basis. When calling, ask for "Broadcasting Room."

Security:

A guard will be assigned to protect equipment left in the room. However, the White House Conference will not be responsible for theft or damage.

CONFERENCE STRUCTURE:

Committee Meetings:

Each delegate will be assigned to one of 12 committees, meeting concurrently in the Sheraton-Park and Shoreham Hotels.

One session of each committee meeting will be devoted to each of the four subject areas- Economic Security and Welfare; Education; Housing; and the Administration of Justice.

Each committee will have a permanent chairman and resource persons.

Rotating teams of panelists will make a presentation on the subject under discussion at the opening of each meeting.

Locations:

Sheraton-Park Hotel

I - Delaware Suite

II - Virginia Suite

III - Maryland Suite

IV - Continental Room

V - South Cotillion Room

VI - North Cotillion Room

Locations:

Shoreham Hotel

VII - Ambassador Room

VIII - Empire Room

IX - Forum Room

X - Blue Room

XI - Palladian Room

XII - Tudor Room

General Session and Dinners:

All are scheduled for Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel.

CONFERENCE SCHEDULE:

Tuesday, May 31

6:30 p.m.	RECEPTION Sheraton Hall, Sheraton-Park Hotel

Wednesday, June 1

9:00 a.m.	GENERAL SESSION (Sheraton Hall) Welcome - Honorary Chairman A. Philip Randolph Remarks - Chairman Ben W. Heineman Keynote Speaker - (to be announced) Orientation - Vice Chairman Edward Sylvester
10:45 a.m.	COMMITTEE MEETINGS - FIRST SESSION Delegates go to their assigned committees
12:30 p.m.	LUNCHEON No formal program. Delegates will eat at the hotels where their committees are meeting.
1:45 p.m.	COMMITTEE MEETINGS - FIRST SESSION CONTINUED
3:30 p.m.	COMMITTEE MEETINGS - SECOND SESSION
8:00 p.m.	DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall (program to be announced)

Thursday, June 2

9:00 a.m.	COMMITTEE MEETINGS - THIRD SESSION
12:00 noon	LUNCHEON - No formal program
2:00 p.m.	COMMITTEE MEETINGS - FOURTH SESSION
7:30 p.m.	FINAL DINNER MEETING Sheraton Hall (program to be announced)

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE "TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

1800 G Street, N. W.
Washington, D. C.
Tel: 737-9010

TRANSPORTATION SCHEDULE

Bus transportation will be furnished for the convenience of the Conference Conferees, as follows:

	May 31, 1966
8:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.	Sheraton Park Hotel to other hotels
	June 1, 1966
8:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m.	Other hotels to Sheraton-Park Hotel
10:15 a.m. to 10:45 a.m.	Sheraton-Park Hotel to Shoreham Hotel (For those conferees assigned to Committee Rooms at Shoreham Hotel)
12:15 p.m. to 1:45 p.m.	Sheraton-Park/Shoreham Hotels,Shuttle Service
6:00 p.m. to 7:00 p.m.	Sheraton Park/Shoreham Hotels to other hotels
7:30 p.m. to 8:00 p.m.	Other hotels to Sheraton-Park Hotel
9:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.	Sheraton Park Hotel to other hotels
	June 2, 1966
8:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m.	Other hotels to Sheraton-Park/Shoreham Hotels
12:00 Noon to 2:00 p.m.	Sheraton-Park/Shoreham Hotels, Shuttle Service
4:45 p.m. to 5:45 p.m.	Sheraton Park/Shoreham Hotels to other hotels
6:30 p.m. to 7:15 p.m.	Other hotels to Sheraton-Park Hotel
9:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.	Sheraton-Park Hotel to other hotels

GSA DC 66-18800

June 1, 1966

A MESSAGE TO THE CONFEREES

In the May 23rd Memorandum for Conferees to the White House Conference "To Fullfill These Rights" the following statement appeared:

"In order to permit a full and free discussion, resolutions or votes will not be recorded."

All conferees favor "full and free discussion." Many, however, question the weight which will be given to the discussion - and hence, the role of the conferees themselves - unless some procedure is adopted allowing the participants to set forth recommendations and resolutions at the Conference itself for presentation to the President of the United States of America.

Accordingly, at a proper time in this morning's agenda a point of order will be raised in an attempt to allow this Conference the freedom of establishing its own procedures with regard to the matter of resolutions and voting.

A fuller rationale for the underlying beliefs which prompt this attempt can be found in the accompanying document. You are asked to read it, and when the point of order is raised to indicate your support, if you are in agreement.

# #

"WE, OURSELVES"

A PROGRAM TO REMEDY

THE SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC

PROBLEMS ENDEMIC TO NEGRO

COMMUNITIES

PRESENTED TO

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE CONVENED

"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"

WASHINGTON, D.C.

BY

AMBROSE I. LANE
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

COMMUNITY ACTION ORGANIZATION

BUFFALO, NEW YORK

June 1, 1966

INTRODUCTION

This convocation presents an awesome challenge to those called together to chart this nation's destiny. For, in truth, as a result of our deliberations Americans in time to come may be blessed with the fruits of internal unity and social harmony, or may reap an abundant harvest of anarchy, chaos and discord.

This much should be clear: past differences between the races have been explored, identified and catalogued; the causes of prejudice and discrimination have been broadcast; the effects of inhuman, unchristian, undemocratic precepts and practices have been tallied and deplored; and the majesty of the law has been invoked in order to "form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity".

In one sense, then, the pathfinders have gone before us. Out of the heartbreaking trials endured heroically by some of our ancestors, and sanctioned savagely by others of our ancestors, we have finally distilled some semblance of a common will to live together as brothers. But the ghostly legacy of the shameful master-servant, subject-object relationship between White and Negro haunts even the councils of God-fearing men schooled in the ideals of reason and mercy. For when one examines the fabric of their pronouncements and programs with attention, one is saddened to discover a familiar thread of contradiction.

On the one hand, they argue that recent actions by courts, legislatures, agencies and bureaus betoken the advent of "The Great Society" where "the ideal of true equality is becoming a real and vigorous idea". They point with satisfaction at a host of indices which suggest to them that the American Negro is no longer a second-class citizen. I wish to God that I could find some comfort in their optimism. But witnessing a Negro become Solicitor General of the United States, or discovering that thirty-five Negroes are bona fide millionaires is little cause for cheer. All the prestige within the power of the government to confer and all the dollars in the vaults of Fort Knox will not command for a Negro the respect that is due to a human person.

On the other hand, the enlightened and compassionate politicans and preachers advise us that all is not well within the ranks of the brethern. Accordingly, they recommend either (1) a direct action approach, or (2) a social work approach to the problem.

The direct action approach is best exemplified by those direct action programs that begin and end with direct action and have no substantial relationship to any long-term goals.

The social work approach can be discerned among "professionals" in old line agencies who view inhabitants of the ghetto paternalistically; what they see is a "black blur" composed of psychotics, junkies, whores, cripples, idiots, clowns, beggars and servants, whose needs can be met by psychoanalysis or contraception, a night stick or a handout, a lecture or a pat on the head.

Both approaches have failed. Behind each approach lies a basic lack of faith in the strength, ability and resiliency of Negroes. The direct action approach conceives of the Negro as a pawn to be manipulated for short-term inconsequential gains that advance the few at the expense of the many. The social working approach conceives of the Negro as something less than a person. It views him as a problem, a threat, or a pet. The schoolman studies him; the churchman pities him; the bureaucrat plans for him; the conservative fears him; the liberal admires him - - but who challenges him? Who challenges him to nurture his own God-given strength, and to direct his own human resources towards the consummation of a marriage between ability and achievement?

Well, when one asks this question one does not encounter a void. In his excellent article on "Mutual Aid and the Negro" in the April issue of Commentary, John Slawson succinctly traces the history of this challenge. And he cites current manifestations of the challenge such as the Opportunities Industrialization Center conducted by Rev. Leon Howard Sullivan in Philadelphia. We should all be grateful to Rev. Sullivan for his pioneer work in this area, and we should do all in our power to encourage his project and others such as Dr. Matthew's Interfaith Health Association in New York City. These men have correctly diagnosed the disease and are taking measures designed to restore health to the patient. But unfortunately, the vision of Rev. Sullivan is not shared by the multitude.

The direct action approach and the social working approach are generally viewed as the correct antidotes for the social and economic ills that plague the denizens of our ghettoes. Among white leaders and black leaders alike one finds a common disposition to eschew radical alternatives to the system that has thus far prevailed in this land. Instead they advocate moderate adjustments within the system. Their approach results in a doing-for; not a doing-with. A using; not a sharing. The terrible premise that underlies such a philosophy is that American Negroes are to be regarded as objects. Recognition of the Negro as a subject, as a human person is essential to any program having as its goal the establishment of a genuine community.

We all deplore the general conditions and temper of most Negro communities in the United States. But when it comes to developing a constructive program that would produce lasting, positive changes in these conditions, we are either found lobbying for more effort on the part of the white man, and for more federal funds, or we are mute. I reject the tired half-way measures that imply that my people are selfish, lazy, childish wards of the State. And I reject even more vehemently the apocalyptic counsels of despair, hate, racism, and rebellion. In their stead I offer, with all the earnestness of conviction that a man can muster, a challenge to my people to undertake a program of sacrifice and self-help.

I have entitled this presentation "We, Ourselves" for two reasons: (1) because in translation it recalls the inspiring lesson of those valiant freedom fighters, the Irish Sinn Fein, whose revolutionary struggle was ultimately crowned with success; (2) because it sums up the truth of Father Thomas Merton's radical but valid message to white America. Father Merton says in his "Letters to a White Liberal" that this is the "Kairos", the providential hour of American history. He bluntly declares that our social system requires complete reformation. And further, he stipulates that this work of reorganization must be carried out under the inspiration of the Negro whose providential time has now arrived and who has received from God enough light, ardor and spiritual strength to free the white man in freeing himself from the white man.

The purpose then, gentlemen, of the program I am submitting to you is nothing less than redemptive.

THE PROGRAM

The general program that I advocate has ten constituent parts. It is recommended for urban areas of high population density. It relies on local Negro leadership for its constitution, direction and execution. It does not supplant worthy efforts already being undertaken by governmental and voluntary groups to combat identifiable social problems, but neither does it depend on them. Its reason for being lies in its faith in the American experience, and its authority rests not only in the conclusions arrived at by the behavioral sciences, but also in the teachings of history and in the insights gained from encountering the reality of the American Negro.

The self esteem, self control and stability that has characterized other ethnic groups as they pursued their place in the sun, stemmed largely from their internal control of the conditions that motivate man to recognize, value, and act in accordance with certain standards. This group strength was a necessary antecedent for the political, social and economic evolution that has attended the emancipation and assimilation of every minority group in our culture. Although the hour is late, we may still develop the same type of internal group control of the conditions of daily life among Negroes, if we establish the following program.

1. Long-range planning in the fields of health, employment, politics, education, housing, the arts, commerce and technology.

2. Permanent, financially-stable organization.

3. Broadening and deepening the economic base of the Negro community.

4. Upgrading of educational and marketable skills.

5. Fostering of the values of excellence, achievement, and self-discipline.

6. Pooling of private resources for common goals and the establishment of cooperatives.

7. Public information facilities to disseminate throughout the community the methods necessary to realistically cope with daily conditions of living.

8. Systematic and intensive efforts on all levels to combat the defeatism inherent in the negative self-image of too many Negro persons, groups and communities.

9. A "truth" campaign to combat the historic evils of racism.

10. A national committee to coordinate the local efforts of each urban program.

This is admittedly a radical program. If implemented however, on anything more than a token scale, I have confidence that it will prove to be a lantern that will light the way for all of us towards the gates of the true community envisioned by the framers of the Constitution, but unhappily still hidden in the shadows of tomorrow.

I have outlined at large what I feel we should be doing. On May 5, the Wall Street Journal advised me that those who were planning this conference would entertain "proposals to get foundations and fraternal groups to supply funds for Negro self-help projects".

In his book "Why We Can't Wait", Martin Luther King made the following observation concerning the August 28, 1963 "March on Washington:

> They came from almost every State in the Union; they came in every form of transportation; they gave up from one to three days' pay plus the cost of transportation, which for many was a heavy financial sacrifice.....Many a Negro speaker that day had his respect for his own people deepened as he felt the strength of their dedication."
>
> ....."For whatever demands the Negro justly makes on his fellow citizens are not an effort to lift responsibility from himself. His tasks are still fundamental, involving risks and sacrifices which he has already proved himself prepared to make."

The program I outline today centers on the "risks and sacrifices which (the Negro) has already proved himself prepared to make".

The history of the Negro in America is a history of sacrifice. The millions of Negro men who elected to walk stoop-shouldered through life in order that their children might stand straight and tall, bore in their bodies and their souls mute testimony to this powerful truth. The fortitude of generations of Negro mothers for whom life often meant enduring a series of unspeakable indignities, has been indelibly branded into the consciousness of Negroes by the black woman's ability to love, and serve, and suffer. Thus, we must remark that only a fool could fail to appreciate the Negro people's potential for sacrifice and for what Pope Paul has called "holy risk". The spirit is there; let us identify the needs.

The need is for Negro initiative in the vital areas of pooling of money and thoughtful, intelligent, informed self-direction. Negroes must assume responsibility for keeping our people properly informed, for establishing working planning groups, for pooling our money and talent, and for developing sufficient political muscle to assure acceptance and execution of plans developed by us. Thus, a heavy unavoidable responsibility lies with us. And one does not meet that responsibility by pointing to the legitimate responsibilities of others. It is simply able leadership to direct this kind of sacrifice. It is a failure of leadership not to do it.

Where shall we begin. Well, I come from Buffalo, New York. Everything that I have stated as applying to the American Negro, generally, applies specifically to the Negroes of Buffalo. And the course of action which I have outlined as appropriate to large urban areas, nationally, applies equally to the residents of Buffalo's ghetto. Perhaps Tucumcari, New Mexico or Bogalusa, Louisiana would be ideal targets for testing this program, but I am unfamiliar with these euphonious municipalities. I am a resident of Buffalo and my acquaintance with its social order has been officially recognized in more than one quarter. Consequently, I hope I will be forgiven if I propose that which I know best as the testing area for this program.

I suggest that a non-profit, membership corporation be formed in Buffalo pursuant to the laws of the State of New York for the purposes of:

1. Providing interest-free loans to existing businesses within the Negro Community for renovation, expansion or improvement thereof.

2. Providing interest-free loans or scholarships to students.

3. Providing educational, vocational, cultural and business training programs to the participants.

4. Providing remedial and pre-school educational training.

5. Conducting psycholigical, psychiatric and social counseling services.

6. Promoting knowledge of and participation in the free enterprise system among the participants.

7. Sponsoring moderate and middle-income housing developments.

8. Providing for the care of destitute, delinquent, abandoned or neglected children.

9. Establishing or maintaining a hospital, infirmary, dispensary, clinic or home for invalid, convalescent, aged or infirm persons.

10. Fulfilling any purpose incidental to any of the foregoing.

This is a rather large order, and I think you will agree that it will take bold and imaginative measures to get it under way. Accordingly, I propose that a foundation be solicited to fund a two-year demonstration project. The project would employ six hundred (600) unemployed or underemployed local Negroes as agents of the corporation.

Each agent would divide his compensated time equally between promotion of and service to the corporation, and an on-going training program designed to provide him or her with the necessary skills to compete successfully in the labor market. The agents would be compensated at the rate of $6000 per year gross wages. Ten per cent of a person's wages would be mandatorially deducted and placed in a personal savings account which could not be drawn upon for at least two years. An additional five per cent of a person's earnings would be contributed directly to the corporation. Therefore, the gross remuneration that the agent would receive would be $5100 annually.

The agent's duties for the corporation would be to seek financing for the corporation throughout the Negro Community. Each employed Negro would be requested to contribute $3.00 per month to the corporation through the salary deduction method. Each unemployed adult, including welfare recipients, would be allowed to participate through a monthly contribution of $.50. Negro businessmen would be requested to tithe; i.e. contribute ten per cent of their quarterly net to the corporation. Professional people and others throughout the Negro community could participate on a flexible scale in accordance with their means.

The agency, foundation or group which funds this demonstration grant would evaluate and report on the corporation's progress at the end of two years. If significant concrete progress results, the "Buffalo Plan" could serve as a pilot for all or most of our metropolitan communities.

EPILOGUE

If, after all of the killings and head beatings and cattle proddings and kickings we have suffered before the world, we do not succeed in providing our children with sufficient security to permit them the healthy exercise of their individual initiative in freedom, we lose. And if, to avoid this loss, we adults must sacrifice part or all of a generation, let it be so. For our sacrifice makes possible both the extension and preservation of what we hold most dear in civilization. Only through sacrifice can we create an "image base" on which our children can build to insure the good life for themselves and their fellow men.

I should like to close with a parable of Thomas Merton.

> It is related that when Mohammed was seeking the light, he thought of becoming a Christian. He went to some Nestorian Christians in a corner of Arabia, and sought a sign of the truth of Christianity from them. In order to see whether they had faith, he asked them to show him the credibility of the Christian message by walking barefoot on red hot coals. The Nestorians told him that he was mad. Mohammed, saying nothing, departed from them. And soon the conviction that he sought came to him in the burning heat of the Arabian desert. It was a truth of stark and dreadful simplicity -- to be proved by the sword.

Group VII

From Floor

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

Talk these points up in pvt. & local public situations -

Juvenile & Criminal records -

Job Standards & Testing

Corrolary - where bonding is required Left to pvt. companies - govt. has to get into bonding -

Need for incentives rather than penalties - to communities who respond -

Ans - EEOC interest -

Lollis Lomax -
don't limit Conclusion to juvenile records -

Mrs. Peacock
* Insurance cancellation - by pvt. companies -

Cleveland Robinson - min wages & Coll Barg. - endorsed report - plus sermon

Coll. Barg as a Civ. Rt. for all workers -

* No min wage will be accepted if every job is not covered

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

(1)

~~INTRODUCTIONS — RESOURCE PEOPLE~~

By now you have considered many items
There are many details in the report
Short of a draft of a law

A FEW GENERAL REMARKS

THIS RESOURCE PANEL CONCERNED
ONLY WITH Economic SECURITY & WELLFARE
The first major heading in the report.

THE Council's job a difficult one FACE the SERIOUSNESS OF PROBLEM

BRIEFLY
To BE BROAD-Scaled enough to offer hope
To Keep Contending pressures in Perspective
To have a Satisfactory ~~amount~~ number of Practical, Specific Suggestions

In part the problem is meshing Short run programs — aimed at the urgencies of the situation — with Sound long-run approaches

To write for specialist (econ. & Civ Rts) policy makers, general public —

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

~~There are a few further things —~~

~~your resource people recognize~~

~~that for you (as for us) that~~

~~The way we View the proposals~~

~~depends to a large degree on~~

~~the views we already hold which,~~

~~Of course, ARE conditioned by~~

~~our values and experience.~~

There will be, of Course, differences of Viewpoint

Perhaps it is not unfair to illustrate this point, and another one, to relate two Conversations from ~~last night~~ Tuesday evening —

2 old and respected friends

1) Re: Specific: naive to think can rely on that "instrumentality — a bureau)
Need a drastic change

2) Re: Proposals in general — who would have thought 3 yrs. ago — Such a Council, Such Sweeping Proposals

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

~~So the other point~~ raises the question — how broad and significant are the proposals? — or are they narrow specifics.

I would submit, that in the economic security and welfare proposals, full implementation (or nearly so) would bring about very dramatic changes indeed.

It SEEMS TO ME THE COUNCIL has attempted to look specifically at the economic security problems faced by Negroes, and to propose those elements of a rational manpower and welfare policy which would work quickly for a solution.

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

In doing this, they have attempted to relate: (1) Available human resources, (2) Training needs, (3) the problems of mobility, (4) the barriers to job information, (5) the need for family security, (6) the job needs of the economy, (7) the job needs of folks.

They have related these items with four ~~three~~ fundamental understandings in mind:

1) that there has been a past history of serious disadvantagement.

2) That there still is widespread, continuing discrim.

3) That intermediate and long run needs of ~~economic~~ the economy ~~needs~~ — as important as they are — are far from being the only social needs which we now must meet rapidly through public policy & action & revitalized pvt. initiative.

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

4)

~~Toward these ends, the report proposes the following;~~

~~As backdrop~~ —

4) That ~~achieving~~ attaining & maintaining a full employment economy is a matter of continuing high priority.

[p. 9 & 10]

* Toward these ends, the report proposes the following:

I) Establish metropolitan jobs councils in all metro areas with substantial Negro population

[P. 11]

Metro. Human Resource Action Program

An all out total effort —

Coordination — Assessment of problem —

Job info — Counseling — training —

Stimulation of pvt. groups —

Reviewing progress

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

~~IB~~)
[P 14] Create a rural job task force to develop & coordinate a comprehensive program ~~for~~ of economic assistance for Negroes.

Similar to metro — rural setting

[p. 15] Special centers for transition problems

~~IA~~)
[P. 17] Develop a Comprehensive Human Resource Program To set goals, measure progress, to structure action —

National — Lab. Dept. responsibility involving local areas

1) Number & characteristics of Negro workers
2) Show services needed
3) Evaluate progress of Negroes in job market

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

(7)

IV ~~Go~~ Develop govt. financed employment [P19] Programs on public works and Services to guarantee the availability of jobs to able workers who cannot be placed in or promptly trained for regular employment.

Candid recognition: Can't always fit people for jobs — must fit jobs to people —
Looks to Pres. Council of Econ. Advisors
[p.20] for leadership.

V MOUNT a Comprehensive, Year-round Employment, Training & Counseling programs for Negro YOUTH through Schools — Com. org. —
V-P. Task force on Youth Motivation
Expand & Improve → Neighborhood Youth Corp. — Job Corp.

(8) ~~144~~

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

VI Affirmative actions by private [P. 23] employers, Labor organizations, and government to provide more & better jobs.

Communication to & encouragement of Negroes regarding employment.
Review of tests & Standards
Work with lower levels of supervision
With local unions

Private org. — Technical Assistance
Contracts only with fair employers
(Project equality)

Court.

[p25] Expand Coverage of Title VII
Greater power to E.E.O.C.
Cease & desist —

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

VII Initiate & Reinforce Supportive Services

[p. 26] to facilitate movement of Negroes into jobs.

[p. 27] (A) Federalize public employment service
Nat'l job market
Nat'l econ. forces affecting job market
Integration of efforts
Standards—

(B) Physical location of jobs

(C) Transportation

(10)

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

VIII STRENGTHEN INCOME Maintenance and Labor Standards Programs.

[P 29]

Improve minimum wage
Expand to Service & Ag. jobs — Increase level.

Adjustment programs

Extend Collective Bargaining Coverage of Law
Organizing

(11)

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

IX RESTRUCTURE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AND RELATED

[p. 30] Welfare Programs to Provide Constructive Benefits to the Poor.

Nat'l ~~Fed~~. Standards for levels of public assistance

Single category to qualify — Need.

Fed. programs in states which Cannot or Will not meet Fed. Standards

Family aid, even with employable male

Encourage training & learning.
even if on ~~welf~~ public assistance

Attention to Staffing Problems

[P. 32] Explicit acceptance of gov't's responsibility for guaranteeing a minimum income to all Americans.

a) making "last resort" employment available.

b) improved public assistance to those not adequately covered by social insurance program

NOTES ON
THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE
"TO FULFILL THESE RIGHTS"
June 1 and 2, 1966
Washington, D.C.

Mr. Chairman, this closes the presentation. Our resource panel stands ready to respond to questions or comments.

More importantly, however, ~~we feel that~~ thoughtful comment and criticism from this group is wanted, its needed — indeed, its why all of us are here.

9:30 —

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS - SHERATON PARK HOTEL - JUNE 1, 1966

	Delaware Suite I	Virginia Suite II	Maryland Suite III	Continental Room IV	South Cotillion Room V	North Cotillion Room VI
CHAIRMEN	(Mrs. F. Freeman Chester Lewis)	(Hon. J. Nabrit — Howard U.P. Dr. O. Singletary)	(Hon. E. Breathitt Dr. Benjamin Mays)	(Louis Pollak) Dean of Yale Law	(Percy Sutton) State Rep — N.Y.	(G. William Miller) Pres., Textron (C Council)
10:45 - 12 Noon	Housing	Education	Economic Security and Welfare	Adm. of Justice and Other	Education	Housing
1:45 - 3:15 p.m.	"	"	"	"	"	"
3:30 - 6:30 p.m.	Education	Housing	Adm. of Justice and Other	Economic Security and Welfare	Housing	Education

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS - SHOREHAM HOTEL - JUNE 1, 1966

	Ambassador Room VII	Empire Room VIII	The Forum IX	Blue Room X	Palladian Room XI	Tudor Room XII
CHAIRMEN	(Theodore Kheel)	(Jack Conway)	(Judge Higgenbotham)	(John Wheeler Thompson Powers)	(Carl Stokes) Mayor's Race Cleveland	(Dr. Kenneth Clark)
10:45 - 12 Noon	Adm. of Justice and Other	Eco. Security and Welfare	Housing	Education — ATTYN. Cleveland National	~~Eco. Security & Welfare~~	Adm. of Justice and Other
1:45 - 3:15 p.m.	"	"	"	"		"
3:30 - 6:30 p.m.	Eco. Security & Welfare	Adm. of Justice andOther	Education	Housing	Adm. of Justice and Other	Eco. Security & Welfare

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS - SHERATON PARK HOTEL - JUNE 2, 1966

	Delaware Suite	Virginia Suite	Maryland Suite	Continental Rm.	South Cotillion Rm.	North Cotillion Rm
	I	II	III	IV	V	VI
CHAIRMEN	(Mrs. F. Freeman Chester Lewis)	(Hon. J. Nabrit Dr. O. Singletary)	(Hon. E. Breathitt Dr. Benjamin Mays)	(Louis Pollak)	(Percy Sutton)	(G. William Miller)
9:00 - 12 Noon	Eco. Security & Welfare	Adm. of Justice and Other	Housing	Adm. of Justice and Other	Education ?	Housing ?
2:00 - 5:00 p.m.	Adm. of Justice and Other	Eco. Security & Welfare	Education	Eco. Security & Welfare ?	Housing ?	Education ?

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS - SHOREHAM HOTEL - JUNE 2, 1966

	Ambassador Room	Empire Room	The Forum	Blue Room	Palladian Room	Tudor Room
	VII	VIII	IX	X	XI	XII
CHAIRMAN	(Theodore Kheel	(Jack Conway)	(Judge Higgenbotham)	(John Wheeler Thompson Powers)	(Carl Stokes)	(Dr. Kenneth Clark)
9:00 - 12 Noon	Housing	Education	Eco. Security & Welfare	Adm. of Justice and Other	Housing	Education
2:00 - 5:00 p.m.	Education	Housing	Adm. of Justice and Other	Eco. Security & Welfare	Education	Housing

THE WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE: EQUAL OPPORTUNITY OR "RAT ALLOWANCES?"

A Response by the Executive Committee of the New York City Pre-White House Conference

to the

"Council's Report and Recommendations to the Conference," White House Conference
"To Fulfill These Rights"

June 1-2, 1966, Washington, D.C.

Two uninvited issues will appear at and will dominate the White House Conference on Civil Rights: the issue of minority separatism and the issue of our country's priorities.

The issue of minority separatism appears because this White House Conference has been organized to give separate consideration to the American Negro. This Executive Committee and the entire New York Pre-White House Conference--composed of New Yorkers without regard to race, creed, color, national origin or socio-economic level--has declared with one voice that the doctrine of separatism is a disservice to all of America's minorities and a retrogressive move in any White House Confernce convened "To Fulfill These Rights."

We reject the President's published statement that if Puerto Ricans or Mexican-Americans want a White House Conference, then "let them ask for it."

We cannot accept the doctrine of separate but equal White House Conferences.

We have instructed the members of our Executive Committee who will be present to register with the conferees in Washington our profound objection to the separatist policy which has guided the Council that arranged this meeting.

(more)

The second issue that will profoundly affect the White House Conference is the problem of national priorities. The priorities issue means: what comes first in the use of our tax money? This decision will make the difference in frustrating or fulfilling the promise of opportunity for equality.

What are the alternatives, and how shall the choice be made? The basic choice of priorities must be made openly and after properly-informed discussion of alternatives. We affirm that the issue of equal opportunity for all Americans is too important to be decided either covertly or unknowingly.

The men and women who attend the White House Conference from the fifty states are present to do much more than enjoy the honor of their invitation and the limelight of this national meeting. The conferees are gathered to discharge a great responsibility: to take counsel with each other and pass judgement on what program will fulfill these rights.

However, the White House Conference program, as released, is so rigidly structured that it permits little freedom or time for the conferees to deliberate as a body. It is vital that the conferees, in the name of the fundamental commitment "To Fulfill These Rights," must re-open the issue of conference process, agenda, decisions and subsequent strategy.

Implicit in the set of proposals set forth by the Council is the assumption that the task of fulfilling these rights can be accomplished within the present ordering of priorities. We challenge that assumption!

Another assumption,set forth in the President's speech at Howard University, and picked up by the planners of the Conference, is that the addition of a few civil rights laws to the nation's present set of priorities has created genuine equal opportunity, and that our task today is to help

(more)

Negroes move "beyond opportunity to achievement." We challenge this assumption! There is no real opportunity to move from! Our task is precisely that of creating real opportunity.

The Council's Report and Recommendations to the Conference accepts the main thrust of our country's present priorities, retains the ghettos, allows the slums to grow, depletes our health services, and leaves millions of our citizens with inadequate education and job training. Our great cities continue to deteriorate as the linked problems of metropolis and race worsen. All this proceeds while massive military and space spending puts more money into circulation and the government celebrates a rising Gross National Product.

In New York City, the Welfare Department grants a "rat allowance" to some welfare clients: extra money for electric light to keep the rats at bay. The share of America's deprived minorities in the federal government's main domestic and foreign spending is in the nature of a bigger "rat allowance." No slum is replaced by a war-induced Gross National Product.

A year ago, this nation was given a solemn warning by John McCone, former Chief of the Central Intelligence Agency, and his colleagues who reported on the rebellion in Watts, Los Angeles:*

> In the summer of 1964, Negro communities in seven eastern cities were stricken by riots. Although in each situation there were unique contributing circumstances not existing elsewhere, the fundamental causes were largely the same:
>
> --Not enough jobs to go around, and within this scarcity not enough by a wide margin of a character which the untrained Negro could fill.

---

*Violence in the City--An End or a Beginning?, A Report by the Governor's Commission on the Los Angeles Riots, 1965.

(more)

--Not enough schooling designed to meet the special needs of the disadvantaged Negro child, whose environment from infancy onward places him under a serious handicap.

--A resentment, even hatred, of the police as the symbol of authority. . . .

"What can be done to prevent a recurrence of the nightmare of August? It stands to reason that what we and other cities have been doing, costly as it all has been, is not enough. Improving the conditions of Negro life will demand adjustments on a scale unknown to any great society. The programs that we are recommending will be expensive and burdensome. . . .

"As a Commission, we are seriously concerned that the existing breach, if allowed to persist, could in time split our society irretrievably. So serious and so explosive is the situation that, unless it is checked, the August riots may seem by comparison to be only a curtain-raiser for what could blow up one day in the future. . . .

"The road to the improvement of the condition of the disadvantaged Negro which lies through education and employment is hard and long, but there is no shorter route. The avenue of violence and lawlessness leads to a dead end. To travel the long and difficult road will require courageous leadership and determined participation by all parts of our community, but no task in our time is more important. Of what shall it avail our nation if we can place a man on the moon but cannot cure the sickness in our cities?"

How does the present Council Report to the White House Conference respond to this plain-spoken warning and counsel?

The Report affirms and confirms the existence of insufferable deprivation among Negroes and other minorities. The inferiority and inequality of their housing, education, health and job conditions and opportunities are all recognized.

This Report is devoid of any definite assurance that the evils which it acknowledges will be ended in the forseeable future. It implies the accomplishment of far-reaching reforms, while not disturbing the present order of national priorities. Our government has committed large resources to placing a man on the moon by 1970, regardless of the cost; has committed large resources to the defeat of Communism in Vietnam and elsewhere, regardless of the cost. But the nation's commitment to its deprived minorities is tentative and conditional--hedged in with if's, but's and maybe's. This "commitment" lacks dollar signs, timetables and concrete implementation.

(more)

Where in the Council's Report and Recommendations is the commitment of money for the task which the McCone Report defined as the most important in our time?

Where is the timetable "To Fulfill These Rights?"

With respect to the program of the White House Conference, there is this unimpeachable test of credibility: Is there commitment of money, manpower and priorities to make equal opportunity a reality for all our people --whites, Negroes, Puerto Ricans, Mexican-Americans, Indians, Americans of Oriental and every other extraction?

The Council Report contains no reference to our need for not less than $25 billion more per year to bring education up to a decent level in our country. There is no hint that the elimination of inhuman housing needs a capital outlay of not less than $15 billion per year. The Council Report is devoid of any reference to the national requirement of not less than $8 billion of additional health and medical investment to bring the blessings of modern medicine to all our people.

The statement of human needs in the Report would have a different meaning if there were any hint of fiscal responsibility for implementation.

(more)

The Report refers repeatedly to "Pilot Projects","Demonstration Programs" and "further research." Does anyone really suspect that we don't know how to build a house, or a school or a hospital? What "demonstrations" are needed on how to employ a plumber, electrician, nurse or teacher? What "research" is needed to enforce laws that are on the books?

To millions of our citizens who have suffered the massive effects of discrimination and economic deprivation, limited efforts will continue to be a fraud on people who demand opportunity for equality in their lifetime. "Demonstration projects" in jobs or education, housing or health services will not suffice. Such proposals mask a strategy of interminable delay.

Massive social and economic action is needed now. But massive remedies require massive financial resources, and that is precisely what is missing in the program for this White House Conference.

* * * * * * *

We are unable to predict whether or how the President and his aides may respond to this challenge. In any case, there is much to be done by marshalling our own talents.

There is abundant evidence that the esse tial strategy for the next stage in equal rights must focus on Metropolitan-Rural Development for Equal Opportunity.

We of the New York Pre-White House Conference, now reorganized as the Metropolitan Development Conference for Equal Opportunity, are convinced that the economics of equal opportunity, especially in our great cities, must now be the center of attention. Accordingly, we have drafted a strategy for organizing and implementing the budgets and efforts designed to make equal opportunity real. Concrete planning has already begun for New York City. We will be pleased to share with you what we have learned, and would like to benefit from your experience.

(more)

We invite inquiries from all interested citizens on how to organize an and plan for their own city and community.

Please address your inquiries to:

Metropolitan Development Conference for Equal Opportunity 475 Riverside Drive, Suite 456
New York, New York, 10027

* * * * *

Leadership Conf on C. R. (Spec.)

CORE Chief Tilts Rights Conference

Seeks to Substitute Agenda; 2,500 Delegates in Capitol

By JOHN HERBERS

(Copyright 1966 by the New York Times Co.)

WASHINGTON—The White House conference on civil rights, scheduled to open here Wednesday, was dealt another blow Tuesday when the national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE) announced he would move to throw out the prepared agenda and start from scratch.

The announcement by Floyd B. McKissick added to the air of uncertainty that hung over the conference as the 2,500 delegates representing many shades of opinion began arriving at the Sheraton-Park Hotel and setting up strategy caucuses of their own.

In this respect, it seemed more like a political convention than a conference. If there was any prevailing attitude it was one of skepticism about what could be accomplished in two days by so many people of divergent views.

McKissick was a member of the 19-member council that drafted the broad set of recommendations to be placed before the conference, for helping the American Negro achieve the equality that has been promised to him under national law.

He attended none of the weekend meetings, however, saying Tuesday that the money he would have spent on travel and expenses was needed for CORE projects. Arriving as a delegate, he called a news conference and announced:

"We have decided after deliberation to participate — in order that the militant can bring forth ideas which otherwise would not be brought forth." Then he added:

"There's a prevailing sentiment that the conference has been rigged by the administration."

McKissick said CORE will offer a motion in the opening session Wednesday to permit a vote on any resolution offered. If this motion is denied, he said, CORE delegates will then decide "what action to take."

Recommendation	Action Needed

~~VII~~ VI. PREPARATION OF A COMPREHENSIVE PROGRAM TO STRUCTURE THE DEVELOPMENT AND PROVISION OF MANPOWER SERVICES FOR MINORITY GROUPS

Develop a comprehensive structured program to survey and meet the employment, training, and related manpower needs of minority groups. This program should include:	Federal legislative and administrative action.

A. Preparation of a "Human Resources Budget" to systematically:

1. Estimate the number, characteristics, and manpower problems of the specific groups in the nonwhite population who require assistance in meeting their job and training needs. This assessment should not only be national in scope but should focus on the 70-odd cities and five or six Southern States in which Negroes are concentrated. Both urban and rural areas of Negro concentration should be included. Data on unemployment, underemployment, and skill attainment should be collected in predominantly Negro neighborhoods on a block-by-block basis if necessary. The assessment should include estimates of future needs based on population, labor force and socio-economic projections.

2. Identify the types of manpower services needed by each of the specific population groups involved; e.g., by in-school youths, out-of-school jobless youths, workers of low skill and educational attainment, older workers, female workers, etc.

3. Establish specific program goals and a time schedule for meeting the goals. These goals should include the number and types of services to be provided, the specific number and types of minority group people to be served, specific locations, and a definite time schedule.

4. Appraise existing Government and non-Government programs to determine the extent to which they can help meet the established goals, and to assign definite priorities and targets to specific agencies.

Recommendations	Action Needed
5. Identify the additional programs, services, and resources needed to fill program gaps and to meet the goals. This would include determination of the nature, size, timing, and location of the additional programs.
B. Coordinated efforts to develop, propose, and support specific programs and increased resources for which the Human Resources Budget has indicated a need.	Federal administrative and legislative action supported by nongovernment and local government groups.
C. A systematic program to evaluate the progress of minority groups in the job market, by area, industry, occupation, and type of worker; and to assess the effectiveness of the Government services involved.	Federal and State administrative and legislative action.

SUMMARY

Jobs, Job Training and Economic Security

Generally, this panel called for a public program to create jobs, a review and re-engineering of occupational classifications, a timetable for the achievement of specific goals in employment and the establishment of "skill inventories." Specifically, the following goals and proposals were put forth.

A. Expansion of Jobs.

1. Governmental and private efforts to achieve full employment.

2. Development of a capital and manpower budget to develop "socially useful employment."

B. Adequacy and Security of Income.

1. Expansion of coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

2. Raising of the minimum wage.

3. Encouraging the organization of unorganized workers.

Income guarantees

4. Adoption of the negative income tax.

5. Supplement incomes for workers performing certain socially necessary jobs.

6. Packaging welfare payments with work incentives to encourage workers to raise their standards of living.

7. Extending coverage and establishing higher average minimum payments for unemployment insurance.

8. Government regulation of hiring and firing patterns for employers of seasonal workers.

C. Elimination of Discrimination.

1. Improvement of the administration of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act through (a) more adequate budget and personnel; (b) shift of orientation from individual complaints to attacking patterns of racial discrimination (legislation may be needed); (c) strengthening of sanctions; and (d) amendment to authorize cease and desist orders and other affirmative action by the Commission.

2. An attack upon racial discrimination in state and local government employment through federal policy.

3. Closer coordination of federal agencies engaged in the various aspects of civil rights.

4. Determination whether Executive Order 11114 (covering non-discrimination in public construction and contracting) should have priority over contractors' collective bargaining agreements with labor.

5. Establishment of performance criteria to determine the extent of Executive Order 11246 (covering non-discrimination by government contractors) compliance and to avoid tokenism.

6. Improvement of intra-urban and inter-urban transportation to assure that minority workers have easier access to jobs at reasonable cost.

D. Improvement and Expansion of Education and Training.

1. Improve the quality of schools in de facto segregated areas.

2. Assure access of minority groups to all publicly supported facilities.

3. Rapidly expand the number and quality of junior or community colleges.

4. Establish federal minimum standards for the conduct of public education.

E. Encouraging Entrepreneurship.

1. Make available increased Federal loans, guarantees and technical assistance to encourage entrepreneurship.

2. Increase contributions from private and non-profit organizations.

3. Encourage joint ventures including Negroes and white (particularly in large and small franchise companies).

F. Continuing Problems of the Rural Negro.

1. Stimulation of employment by the Federal Government to enable Negroes to continue to live on Southern farms.

2. Greater efforts by governmental and non-governmental agencies to provide a range of services to speed the assimilation of rural Negroes into the urban economy.

G. Expanding and Strengthening Non-Governmental Efforts.

1. Implementing programs for locating plants and businesses so as to reach Negroes in target areas.

2. Re-investment of gains from increases in productivity into structured job expansion and job training programs.

3. Retailoring of jobs for effective absorbtion of Negro workers at present skill levels.

4. Greater efforts by trade union organizations to remove barriers to apprenticeships, employment, and upgrading members of minority groups.

5. Action by community leaders to establish, strengthen and make more effective local and state equal employment opportunity councils.

6. Adoption and expansion by non-profit organizations of equal employment opportunity practices in all of their economic activities.

H. Expansion and Improvement of Federal Training Programs.

? 1. Tax credits to broaden and deepen in-plant and plant-associated education and training.

2. Use of federal government contracting power to insure improved training opportunities.

3. Large scale expansion of the Manpower Development and Training Act and an effort to bring Negroes in large numbers into such programs.

4. Dissemination of information about the availability of training opportunities to potential employees.

5. Additional stress on on-the-job training.

6. Education of local leaders that it is to their advantage not to prevent low wage employees from securing training.

I. Strengthening the United States Employment Service.

1. Federal leadership of the Employment Service through the establishment of national standards (as a second best answer to the federalization of the System), upgrading through better staffing, more aggressive action by the federal government to assure that the Service acts in a non-discriminatory manner, and broadening the scale and scope of the Service to assure that all people (including minority groups in rural areas) have access to it.

2. Placing personnel under state merit systems.

3. Re-allocating federal funds to help minority group members by placing additional funds at the disposal of employment officers.

wrote(?) original proposal

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Charles Horwitz-Jackson Miss.-August 7, 1969-with Delta Ministry

Some parts of the plans of the organization have changed since they began. Originally they had two goals--1) to raise funds to put 4 organizers into the field and 2) the group wold try to put as much time as possible into helping the organizers. These people had always been working with blacks but would make a commitment to phase into white organization. Some of them ~~might eventually~~, it was planned would ~~really~~ actually take jobs as organizers.

Now they have had to rethink some of these ideas. First, they can't raise the funds they wanted to. The groups that would support black radicals will not support whtes. They didn't want to go to OEO for funds because it tied them down too much. For the summer recreation project, which is the primary thing of importance they are doing now, they went to OEO, but they were able to do this without being restricted. However if they had confronted the power structure they would have been smashed. Nothing that was done attracted publicity. If it had the program would have been smashed. Thus it wasn't that they were able to get funds for a radical venture without the associated strings. It was just that they were able to disguse their ultimeat goals and to do things that did not openly challenge the power structure. He says that the project was designed in some ways to do research and get into position to do organizing.

Had to reconsider giving the organizers such a free and independent head to do organizing. There needed to be more involvement of the people on the Committee in it. For one thing, with all the difficulties of organizing unless the organizer is directly involved with a group and the group with him he will tend to lose enthusuasm. There is the need to give the organizer freedom to take the group where it wants to go, but there needs to be more involvement of the people behind him in the process than there was with Steve.

group = [illegible]

local [illegible]?

?

They were too idealistic about the ability of the organizers to go and organize on their own. Steve had had success organizing several plants in the area without being a paid employee of a union. However, community organizatio is different and more difficult. The situation there is rather amorphous without a single issue around which to build the organization. In fact, Steve seemed to be trying to find the one issue but was never able to do it. He could never get the community together on one issue.

Since Steve was so independent, the Committee doesn't even know where the Miss. Progressive Union is. Only one person on the Committee has even met physically?

the group. Steve said they weren't ready yet to meet these people - not ready to meet the middle class radical-liberal types.

Seems to be saying that the reason for Steve's failure was partically the fault of the group and partially the fault of Steve as a person and his lack of character (He left the project without telling anyone goodby.). Steve was very independent. It seems he was saying that the allowance of this independence was a mistake. He also feels that what he is saying about independence is not just true for Steve but has some validity for other organizers, because Steve (and Lee) were not very much different from other organizers they might get.

-Had to rethink their involvement with middle class people. They had originally planned for the middle class white organizing to be going on at the same time as the lower class organizing and serve to support the lower class effort. However, now without anything to support in the lower class community its position is unnecessary. Peltz who was working with the middle class doesn't think its time yet.

Peltz also thinks that there is a much greater need and priority should be given to organizing the poor whites. They don't want the middle class group to play an important role in the community, at least at this time. Their goals would conflict with those of the poor whites and the Committee favored the position of the poor more. The Committee doesn't want to have to contend with an opposing group with its own "head."

Horwitz thinks it much more important to organize int the white community (I think the poor white community) than to build middle class support groups for blacks.

-The goal of organizing poor whites demanded ideological unity. It also demanded that they did not have security leaks because they would be discussing matters which they would not want publicity on. This is the reasons for keeping their group small. He also mentioned a reason for keeping it small as being the need to meet in individual home rather than black meeting places and they could thus only accomodate a small number. They are planning to bring in new members at the next meeting under the same thoughts as before.

At this meeting they are asking black radicals to participate for the first time. He states there were two reasons for not asking them before. First, with a number of young radicals in the group and somewhat new in terms of dealing with blacks, they didn't want to have to contend with "reverse Tomism."

or the tendency to accept anything a black man said simply because he was black and you personally felt guilty. Secondly, they did not want to overburdent the already overworked black radicals with a new and struggling organization. These people had told them to go work in their own community and the Committee didn't want to ask them to help in this task until after they had done the initial work. Also, they didn't want to involve the blacks in asking their traditional sources of funds for money for the white organizing project.

-He feels that the formation of this committee could happen in other Southern states. There are enough of the liberal-radical constituency around to do it. However, it couldn't happen in a small town in other states or Miss. for that matter.

-Members of the group contributed some type of tythe to keep the organization going. Horwith says that some of them gave 5-10% of their salaries. Kalas said though that the monthly income from the contribution might have been around $50.00 which doesn't square with Horwitz's figures.

-Lee the other organizer left because she had to work with a partner and was too independent to be a real partner. She said that the also thought the Committee would be more active. The group thought she would be the fairly independent and self-sufficient type of organizer. She didn't like the uncertainlt of the situation. If something mor firm had been going she might had made it. The need for the group to be more active and for theem to have more contact with the organizers is the type of thing that Horwitz thinks is applicable for organizers in general.

Steve wouldn't move fast enough in the process or orgnnizing. When they tried to push him, he became very sensitive--again the need for a better understanding and more involvement.

-They didn't attack the race issue. Felt it was better just to organize and to let the people you work with see that your life style is not a racist life style and though their respect for you they start to change.

-Horwitz is not as firm as Kalas about the fact that the goal of the group is to organize poor whites for power and not for the goals of a coalition. He is not apparently as firm either on the fact that they have talked this point out completely. He says that there is diagreement in the group over this point and that everyone see a coalition somewhere at the end. It is just a matter of timing and degree.

-He says that the Committee might have been slightly better off had they not seen the two models of ACT and GROW. He agrees that ACT was the most impressive and seemingly relevant. (I can't remember whether the reason for thinking they would be better off is that they would have been hit by the conflict or that they would have developed their own model.)

-GROW has proved that Klanish, racist people can be forced to see their self interest in cooperation and working with blacks.

-In the election he said that the worker's candidates received only 2-3% of the vote. Either the GROW people and the candidates didn't do their homework or they needed more time.

-The question now is whether the whites having attempted to cooperate with blacks in the election and having failed will revert back to their old position. He says the situation is unpredictable - that even a small incident could easily blow the possiblities for a coalition.

-GROW has also shown whte organizers where to go in terms of a beautiful situation fro the development of cooperation - a place where white racists had to co-operate in order to be successful. This was traditionally a very Klanish, racist town. Greenville, Miss. with its tradition for liberality would not be such a beautiful location.

-You can't change people by less that action of self-interest.

-One of the problems that mus be overcome to get whites organized is racism. (It seems significant that he said one, although the conditions of this moment did not allow it to be discussed further. If in fact this is what he meant, then it seems to be a logical basis for his differing at least to some degree with Zellner's and GROW's confrontation of the racial issue.)

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

John Kalas-Jackson, Miss.-August 6, 1969

Laurel is a unique situation for Mississippi. It had a Klan Union (disputed by Zellner) with Blacks holding the balance of power. It was also a company town with the company being ~~Nxxxxx~~ Northern in origin.

It ~~xx~~ is also interesting because of the support work done by the women. They helped to raise money to keep families together through bake sales, etc. They also ~~x~~ stood together against the merchants who could have really pressured the people and cause them to think twice about cutting people off. He thinks Zellner had these ideas and had them implemented in Laurel.

SCEF takes on dead issues just for the sake of raising the issue, creating the disturbance, and being a martyr. Zellner is more of a pragmatist. He tends to concern himself with tactical use of issues and would be one the Alinsky side of an Alinsky-SCEF ~~xxxx~~ spectrum is one were imagined. However, Kalas doesn't think by any means that Alinsky has all the answers. One reason he doesn't is because he works with Northern ~~XX~~ ploiticians who follow their own self-interest. Alinsky sets it ~~y~~ up so that if this self interest followed he wins. Southern ~~xxx~~ politicians will go against their own ~~x~~ self interest. If they didn't the civil right movement would be better off than it is at this point.

Alinsky hades all ideology. He thinks only about strategy. He hates labor unions and likes churches. Almost every place he had been recently was set up by a church. He will not go into a community if things are together and ready for him.

The Greater Jackson Committee was started in Nov. It was called by Jimmy Jones, at least in part in response to the effects of Black Power in excluding whites from the black community and their statement to go work in your own community. The meeting in Nov. was all white. They have been catching flack from the blacks who say they are organizing a dangerous group. They are now expanding members and are at the point of inviting blacks to ~~fxx~~ Join for the first time.

They kept a small group because of the necessity of keeping their information der rather strict control. They have lost or are losing about 6-10 members very legitimate reasons such as moving out of the area. They, at the meeting will bring in more members.

the meeting in Nov. they had people from GROW and ACT. Act seemed more ssive to them and more reasonable for their situation. One thing to deep in mind though was that Zellner was not able to come becsuse of the birth of a child by his wife. ~~Hexixxby~~ According to Kalas, the other GROW workers are not nearly as impressive as Zellner.

Rather than a group working for racial unity and the joining of blacks and whites as their primary goal, the Committee is trying"to organize whites for power." This has been discussed rather thoroughly by the group too according to Kalas.

Kalas-August 7, 1969

He says that Jones was more up for the goal of the coalition as primary. His strong influence at the beginning may be the reason that the introductory portion seems to come accross as having this goal. The goal of the group is the organizing of whites for power.

ACT is working on the basis of coalitions on the basis of self-interest and the concept of self interest is rather complete in itself. With GROW the effort is to change minds. This is at least one of the reasons for the confrontation with the race issue immediately.

Kalas said that one of the ACT men at their first meeting did say that he mentioned his civil rights contacts to groups he worked with,(but the feeling I got was not the confrontation spoken about by Zellner.)

Kalas doesn't think the chances are very good at all of getting funded in any major amount for the program. The people who would give money to black groups to organize have not yet shifted to giving money to organize whites. He thinks they might get some "frustration money" -- grants of $1000 or so and will be able to and have to limp along on that.

Kalas-August 6, 1969

The Governor put pressure on some of the people who had their names on the proposal in terms of threatening not to approve their application for other positions.

Brooks has the best program going at present in terms of white organizing in Jackson.

Gary Brooks-Jackson, Miss.-August 7, 1969

Horwitz and others pushed the Hinds County Coalition for Youth Action Board which is make up of 20 black high school students to establish one white summer recreation center. There were 19 centers for black young people which besides recreation taught black history, black culture, etc. This is callse the Summer Recreation and Tuborial Program. The hidden agenda behind the establishment of the center was that of establishing a beachhead for further organizing. (Kalas says that the efforts of Horwitz were separate from any official involvement with the Committee.) They started this center in South Jackson, the worst white area in the city.

When they opened up the center, they invited everyone in the area to come out to the opening. However, everyone who showed up except for one 20-year old was between the ages of 8 and 17. The center became a defacto day care center.

Through the one older guy he attempted to get other older guys involved. They found that one of the issues that bothered these people was police brutality. These guys and girls, or at least many of them, had been involved with the law. The center gave out leaflets telling of the legal rights of these individuals. They gave out 30 of the leaflets to mainly the 15 year old boys and older.

Approximately 20-25 kids a day come by the center. 8-10 guys 17-20 come by when they are not working.

He was initially afraid about telling the locals about their politics. He isn't sure whether the people have changed as a result of associating with them, but at least now they accetp them as "nigger lovers", which Gary at least in part as Zellner, thinks is a healthy change in itself.

He says that these people have attitudes that are amazingly like blacks in relation to their personal and group worthlessness. No one has ever cared about them and they become very protective of Gary and the others at the center who have shown an interest in them.

The next issue after the police brutality leaflets was that of a guy having a friend at the county farm who had been beaten up by a guard. Many of the boys in the group had either served time there or had friends who had. They were going to get together a number of affidaths on the brutality and take them to the county board. Gary says that the guys in the group don't really have any hope of getting anything accomplished--a real sense of powerlessness-- and he doesn't know where they will go after it fails--seems either militant action or give up. However, since that time they have not been able to move ahead on the county farm issue because they have been fighting and effort ~~to evict them~~ by the land lady to evict them.

She supposedly had two complaints about roudyness or noiseness in the neighborhood. The kids who went to the center circulated petitions to keep them there and got 150 signatures on them. The land lady refused to look at the petitions. Gary and the people from the center planned to picked her home them but it was rained out. They passed out leaflets to people in the community to call her and protest this move. He is not sure how many people called her. They were also planning to take her to J. P. court to fight it, but she finally gave in. Gary thinks she did so because she didn't want to have to go through the trouble of a trial.

The police often cruse by the area and came in one night after the eviction process started. They at least noticed some of the radical literature that was there. Some time later the FBI made an appearance. Gary thinks the reason for these two appearances may have been that they were resisting the eviction order and when the police saw the literature they let the FBI know about it.

-They have had a couple of people come down at night and sing. This program has worked. Some like draft counceling have not.

-The recreation program is designed to give legitimacy to their other activities. They have developed real good relations with the kids in the neighborhood but their relationships with parents really aren't strong. Some like them; some dislike them; and some are indifferent. They have been walking a tight rope between turning the program into a worthless rec. program and alienating them.

-There is some potential down there with the older guys, but he really doesn't know exactly what direction to try to go with them. The 8-10 older guys might have some political potential if given training. They are most easily organized around police problems. One thing here, though, is that these problems are not constant enough to organize around such as a defense organization for the community-- the events are too infrequent.

In relation to the problems with the police, these people realize brutality against the blacks. They have no love for the police. The police treat them badly and these people know the police don't like blacks.

-One of the ideas of establishing the center was to go into the poor white community and find out who could be organized on what issues, who was in the community, and what were they doing, etc. They were operating on the principal of organizing through service.

-Tried to get the parents organized aroud the issue of a day care center but this didn't work. The people they could work with best were the yound workers and dropouts. The issues thus far were brout up by the guys -- ~~pli~~ police buntality and working conditions were the best issues. ~~Somehowthey haventthesenablexteafind~~ There is a proposal being made for the fall for a continuation of the summer rec. program. There would be an attempt to keep as many centers opern as possible on a volunteer basis. There would also be as many as five tutor/organizers hired, one of them being white and Brooks hoping to get the job. The black you organizers would work to get more blck history into the school programs and to talk of hiring policiss. The blacks would be ~~bl~~ political organizers working with high school students under the cover of the tuborial program. Since there isn't any money to do organizing being identified as such, the black and white people interested in it are trying to milk OEO for as much as possibe.

-He will probably be the white organizer. The two things he can see to work on are ~~trxi~~ getting the county farm issue off the ground through either the Legan Constitutional Civil Defense organization, the Miss. branch of the Civil liberties organization or through the Board of Supervisors. The second are is counciling on police problems. His future plans about organization aren' very firm. No one has shown him the way to organize a community. He says that community organization is difficult here because there isn't a feeling of community. (I think he said that he couldn't find an issue on which to really organize the area.)

-He and Don, a P. L. guy, have been talking about taking jobs in the local bakery and trying to organize it. Ther are about 4 or 5 guys they work with at the center who are employed at the bakery. A local guy who they just hired to help at the center said he might change his job so he could work there and help them. However, Brooks says that they haven't yet done even the basic research on the plant. He also has real doubts about the avisability and desirabilisy of doing labor organizing which would probably have such a slim chance of success and which would send them into a traditional and conservative labor union. In addition, he says he shudders when he thinks of working at that plant. (He says the wages there are around $1.60 and hour --Kalas had said $1.15-- he says that racist practices were used.) From what he says, the organization of the plant seems only a possibility.

David Doggett and Lynn Rogers-Jackson-Kudzu-August 7, 1969

In terms of organizing the state the only thing besides the paper itself was the First Annual Miss. Youth Jubilee held in April in Jackson where they mentioned the possibiliby of froming a state-wide organization and the second to be held in October where it will be discussed again.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Don Miller-Jackson Miss.-August 7, 1969

Differences in GROW and ACT--- GROW needs a crisin situation while ACT can work on a traditionnl geographic approach. FROW hits the racial issue very quickly and head on while ACT is much slower and believes that the groups must stay separate (either for much longer or indefinitely.). ACT does not want publicity at least in the early stages.

He thinks that the ACT approach has more to offer in the Jackson environment.

Doesn't think that the liberal-radical group like has been formed in Jackson could be formed in any other deep South state besides Georgia, and thinks that there was in fact a meeting in Georgia shortly after the one in Mississippi with Si Kahn and others. He doesn't know, however, the results' of this meeting. He thinks that Mississippi has had the publicity to bring people in. The '64 and '65 summers helped in this. Because of its problems, it has also had the visibility to attract people and make accomplishment there a goal to be striven for.

He feels that eventually the Jackson Area Committee will get something off the ground, because there are enough people who are interested in the long term interest of the state and will stick with it, who are also finding themselves being phased out of work with the black community.

He says that the co-ops he knows about with white membership and he will make a generalization for the others are just organizations of moderate income farmers looking for more income. There are not any white co-ops in the state conparable to the black ones. There aren't any which are really poor white organizations. The officials in the state just don't make information about FHA loans and that type of assistance available to these groups.

Mary Miller says that even in the northern part of the state where there are few blacks there is no organization. She seems to inficate that this is the place where it would be if it existed. However, the entire organizing staff is black and it wouldn't work for them to organize in this region. Also, they haven't made any efforts to organize in the area anyway.

Miller says the people in Washington don't seem to understand that you can't bring in whites by giving equal effort for whites and blacks in a head start program. If you talk of special white projects the people immediately react and say that this is the start of something bad in the reverse. EPO got their money straight from R. and D. in Washington. You can get things like this done if you talk to the right people in Washington. It's especially difficult for "a white man from Mississippi" though to talk about a special need to work with whites. It doesn't seem to go to well with the old liberal thinkers of the pre-'64 era.

2

orig. White H.R.

Dated

GREATER JACKSON AREA COMMITTEE: Proposal for experimental project in organizing whites in Mississippi

For the Committee:

Mr. Charles Horwitz
P. O. Box 139
Edwards, Mississippi
852-2611

MISSISSIPPI

An all-white federal jury in Meridian after deliberating more than 14 hours found seven white men guilty of conspiracy in connection with the deaths of Michael Schwerner, James Chaney, and Andrew Goodman, three civil rights workers who were lynched in Neshoba County in June, 1964. Eight defendants in the case were acquitted. The jury was unable to reach a verdict as to the guilt or innocence of three other defendants.

The Justice Department under an 1870 civil rights law brought federal indictments against the 18 white men charging them with conspiracy to deny civil rights to the slain men.

The case built by federal attorney John Doar essentially was based on the testimony of two FBI informers, one of whom was on the scene during the slayings. They said Schwerner was marked for death by the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan and that Goodman and Chaney were killed only because they happened to be with him. Witnesses said that on the day before the men were slain, Klansmen set fire to a Negro church near Philadelphia as a ruse to bring Schwerner to the area. After visiting the burned-out church the three men were arrested by Neshoba County Deputy Sheriff Cecil Price and held in jail incommunicado for six hours. In that period Klansmen assembled several miles down the highway. When the men were released they were chased down in a hundred-mile-an-hour race, taken into the backwoods and shot to death. Their bodies were buried under an earthen dam.

Among those convicted were Deputy Sheriff Cecil Price and Klan Imperial Wizard Samuel Bowers. Neshoba Sheriff Lawrence Rainey was acquitted. Neshoba Sheriff-elect E. G. (Hop) Barnett, and two other defendants who received a mistrial, will be tried again at an as yet unnamed date.

After the verdict Federal Judge Harold Cox held Price and another convicted man, Alton Roberts, in jail without bond for threats they allegedly made against him while the jury was considering its verdict. In an unusual, but not unprecedented move, Judge Cox re-charged the jury after it told him it was "hopelessly deadlocked." Judge Cox reminded the jurors that they should consider the majority opinion in their deliberations.

South-watchers throughout the country hailed the verdict as the beginning of a new day in Mississippi. Judge Cox (who in a voter registration case once referred to Negroes as "acting like a bunch of chimpanzees") drew praise for his handling of the case. At one point during cross examination he admonished defense lawyers for race-baiting questions.

The case had significance beyond the immediate fact that for the first time Mississippi white men had been convicted for offenses against civil rights workers. Some observers trace the change in mood among many Negroes toward black separatism in part to the disillusion that set in within the civil rights movement after the Neshoba County slayings. There was, they say, the feeling that nothing would be done, that those guilty would never be brought to justice. Some felt, too, that if Schwerner and Goodman had been Negroes the case would have been forgotten in white America as numerous cases before in which Negroes alone had been slain were forgotten.

Civil rights observers see no great hope that Mississippi justice has improved as a result of the Meridian verdict. For it was federal action, not state or local action, that initiated the conspiracy trial. In fact it was precisely because of local inaction that the federal government became involved at all. Officially the deaths of Schwerner, Goodman and Chaney remain unsolved. No state charges have ever been brought against anyone for killing the three men. Despite state hints now that it will seek murder indictments few expect that the guilty person or persons will ever be tried or if tried, convicted.

The Missis
harvest of ne

Bombers s
Israel in Jack dynamite blas shattered win after the bom
three white m
as Ku Klux K charged with a who sought to connection w
Paul Johnson
Thompson d
tack. The Gr
liance, compo
Negro membe ance" to the b a statement w have walked our sorrow to our sorrow fo bomb; our so have directly such acts of v was the scene Relations Cou
before the inci

On October campus of Tou their attack
William Bush, and former di poverty progr
described the the attack on gogue.

Nightriders
Carthage Neg
registration a Sheriff Russel
six rifle shots"
of NAACP le
the evening of drew a warni
Charles Evers
all over Missis
ed that from comes on thei and looks sus and shoot to

Wilkinson
Netterfield dis of an armed c ville between n for Defense a Federal Judge

ce and another
Roberts, in jail
s they allegedly e the jury was
In an unusual, move, Judge
y after it told deadlocked."
he jurors that majority opin-
s. hout the coun-
the beginning
pi. Judge Cox
tion case once
"acting like a drew praise case. At one nation he ad-ers for race-

ance beyond for the first en had been against civil servers trace ng many Ne-atism in part in within the ter the Nesere was, they ng would be uld never be elt, too, that an had been ve been fors numerous groes alone
ten.

e no great ice has ime Meridian action, not nitiated the was precise-on that the involved at Schwerner, emain une ever been killing the s now that ments few or persons convicted.

The Mississippi fall has produced a harvest of new race related violence.

Bombers struck the Temple Beth Israel in Jackson September 18 with a dynamite blast that tore open walls and shattered window panes. A few hours after the bombing FBI agents arrested three white men whom they identified as Ku Klux Klansmen. The men were charged with assaulting a federal officer who sought to question one of them in connection with the bombing. Gov. Paul Johnson and Jackson Mayor Allen Thompson denounced the terror attack. The Greater Jackson Clergy Alliance, composed of both white and Negro members, staged a "walk of penance" to the bombing scene and issued a statement which said, in part, "We have walked to this place to express our sorrow to the Jews and their Rabbi; our sorrow for the ones who set off the bomb; our sorrow for ourselves who have directly or indirectly encouraged such acts of violence." The synagogue was the scene of a Mississippi Human Relations Council meeting a few weeks before the incident.

On October 5 bombers struck on the campus of Tougaloo College. Target of their attack was the home of Dean William Bush, a white faculty member and former director of a Jackson antipoverty program. An FBI spokesman described the bombing as "similiar" to the attack on the Jackson Jewish synagogue.

Nightriders attacked the home of a Carthage Negro prominent in voter registration activities. Leake County Sheriff Russell Edwards said "five or six rifle shots" were fired into the home of NAACP leader Jonas Hardney, on the evening of October 7. The attack drew a warning from the NAACP's Charles Evers who said that "Negroes all over Mississippi have been instructed that from now on if any person comes on their property . . . at night and looks suspicious . . . to shoot and shoot to kill."

Wilkinson County Sheriff Charles Netterfield discounted the significance of an armed confrontation at Centreville between members of the Deacons for Defense and local whites. Netterfield said the groups faced each other at a service station during a protest march by 500 Negroes but no shots were fired. Mon C. Allen, defeated Negro candidate for sheriff in the September primaries, said whites left the scene when the Deacons appeared with rifles.

In Laurel, three hooded men attempted to beat a nineteen-year-old female employee of the Child Development Group of Mississippi, but released her when the girl's mother tore the mask off one of the men. The men forcibly entered the girl's home armed with shotgun, pistol, and rubber hose.

Chicksaw County District Attorney James Gore said in October he will go before a county grand jury to present the case of an Okolona policeman who is alleged to have slain a Negro when he resisted arrest. A three-man Justice of the Peace court earlier freed the policeman on the ground that there was "insufficient evidence" to bind him over to a higher court. Four eyewitnesses testified they saw the arrest and shooting. The Negro was handcuffed and shot three times.

A circuit court jury in Collins was unable to reach a verdict in the case of Cecil Sessums, accused in the shooting of T. W. Rogers of Seminary. Rogers said that Sessums and two other men abducted him and threatened to kill him because he refused to carry out the orders of the secretive White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan.

Negro parents in Noxubee County, testifying in contempt of court proceedings brought by the Justice Department against county school officials, told of being threatened and intimidated after enrolling their children in previously all white schools. The Negroes said they withdrew their children from the schools after visits by two white school officials.

Political Change on the Wind

Republican gubernatorial candidate Rubel Phillips told Mississippi voters in a statewide TV address that the paramount issue facing Mississippi today is full economic rights for Negroes. Paraphrasing Booker T. Washington,

Labor Dec
Jackson Daily News 9/4/67

GOOD JOBS AVAILABLE!

if you are interested in a good paying permanent job . . . .

HERE IS WHAT YOU HAVE BEEN LOOKING FOR . . .

Applications are now being accepted for a number of immediate job openings – Both skilled – and unskilled – wage rates begin at 2.32 per hour and range up to 3.12 per hour.

SOME SAMPLE RATES ARE AS FOLLOWS:

- Yard Laborer 2.32
- Punch Press Operator 2.47
- Rip Saw Operator 2.47
- Lift Truck Operator 2.59
- Edger & Trimmer Operator 2.67
- Operating Millwright 2.92
- Automobile Mechanic 2.92
- Forming Press Operator 3.12
- Power Plant Operator 3.12
- Utility Electrician 3.12

FRINGE BENEFITS INCLUDE

- 8 PAID HOLIDAYS
- PAID VACATION
- GROUP LIFE INSURANCE
- JURY PAY
- PREMIUM SHIFT PAY
- OVERTIME PAY
- MEDICAL AND SURGICAL BENEFITS

Apply in person at the employment office - Masonite Corporation - Laurel, Mississippi or Call Mr. S. H. Ford 428-4311 Area Code 601

MASONITE CORPORATION

P.O. BOX 1048
LAUREL, MISS.
39440

AN EQUAL OPPORTUNITY EMPLOYER

In
Strike violence associated with Masonite in Laurel see
+ 3 mis

Labor Miss.

END OF STRIKE TERMS LISTED

Hundreds Applying for Re-employment

7/13/67

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

LAUREL, Miss. — Hundreds of striking employes of Laurel's Masonite plant are applying for re-employment this week in keeping with an agreement between Masonite Corp. and International Woodworkers of America (IWA).

The strike began April 21, 1967.

Under terms of the settlement, local union 5-443 IWA will be governed by a board of trustees instead of elected officers.

A. M. Collins, representative of IWA's general offices in Laurel, is setting up the board.

Among major provisions of the agreement, terms of which were announced Tuesday, are:

—Extension of a work contract signed March 4, 1967 to December 1, 1970.

—Masonite will continue procedures currently employed on a permanent basis at the option of the company and will not be the subject of any grievance, litigation or National Labor Relations Board charge.

—Union members who had not returned to work, numbering about 1,400, may file for permanent bargaining units which will in the future become available.

—Employes will be hired from a list of past employes judged acceptable by the company.

—No added employes will be hired in bargaining union jobs in maintenance for two months.

—Preference will be given to qualified union employes for two years.

—Other bargaining union jobs in other departments will be filled from a preferential hiring list of qualified persons for a period of two years.

—Returning employes will receive credit for previous services for benefits including vacations, holidays, participation in the pension plan, group insurance and medical benefits.

—Early retirement benefits will be open for those former employes who are not on the preferential list.

—The company will remove its Unfair Labor Practices Act charge against the union with the union dropping appeals.

Labor-Miss

Women Protest In Laurel

7/7/67

JN

LAUREL, Miss. (AP) — A group of about 100 women marched on Laurel's City Hall today demanding the mayor do something about the lengthy Masonite strike.

The group's spokesman, Mrs. Edna Earl Lewis, said "nobody can seem to do anything.

Mayor Fern Bucklew confered with about 12 of the women while the remainder of the group waited inside the building.

A hearing is set for this afternoon on Masonite charges that the union has violated provisions of a Chancery Court order forbidding mass picketing at the company's Laurel plant.

The International Woodworkers of America Local 5-443, struck the plant last April and the company has since reopened the plant with other workers.

STRIKE IS OVER-- PLANT OFFICIAL

Labor Miss

Masonite Operating with New Workers

Times Picayune

LAUREL, Miss. (AP) — The manager of the Masonite Corp. plant testified Wednesday that he considers a strike at the plant to be over.

Manager R. E. Paul said members of the International Woodworkers of America who have not returned to their jobs have been replaced.

Over 2,000 workers struck the plant April 21 charging the company was harassing union officials.

The plant reopened last month with 1,000 newly hired employes including vacationing college students.

Paul testified in chancery court on a hearing to gain a permanent injunction against the union barring a strike.

Union president J. D. Jolly testified the prime reason for the walkout was revised shipping procedures and suspension of union representative Freddy Adcock.

Over 80 union members were charged with contempt of court for alleged refusal to end the strike. The officials countered with a claim that they gave orders to return to work, but the individual workers failed to respond.

In Jackson, Mississippi AFL-CIO president Claude Ramsay urged both parties "to return to the bargaining table to settle this matter."

Ramsay said the presence of so many untrained workers in the plant may have led to the death of a 20-year-old college student Tuesday.

Jack Craft, 20, son of an engineer at the plant, was killed when a piece of equipment exploded.

"Similar accidents will surely follow unless this dispute is resolved at an early date," Ramsay said.

"I urge both parties to this dispute to return to the bargaining table and settle this matter before more lives are lost."

1968

LABOR AND THE SOUTH

Laurel, Mississippi

Black Workers Set

Against White - Strike Broken

Robert Analavage

This article originally appeared in the January 1968 issue of the SOUTHERN PATRIOT, which is published by the Southern Conference Educational Fund in Louisville, Kentucky.

Robert Analavage is an Assistant Editor of the SOUTHERN PATRIOT, and on the staff of SCEF.

published by
The Radical Education Project
Box 625, Ann Arbor, MI 48107

5¢

Black and White Divided

Laurel Strike Is Broken

(Editor's Note: A recent strike in Laurel, Miss., between Local 5-443 of the International Woodworkers of America (IWA) and the Masonite Corporation points up what trade-union experts in the South have been saying for some time:—that industries in the region plan to use divisions between white and black workers in a new way.

(For several generations the owners of land and industry have kept political and economic control by getting white workers to believe they had an identity of interest with the owners because of the color of their skin. At the same time, black workers were pushed to the lowest rung of the ladder.

(Today, because of the new strength of black people and their movement for freedom, employers can no longer keep them down. So the employers now try to convince black workers that they will do better by going along with management rather than with the white workers.

(The result is the same:—a division which benefits nobody but the employer. The Laurel strike is typical because it also involves the question of automatic machines' replacing people; it also involves the continued moving of more industries into the South.

(Robert Zellner, director of grass-roots organizing work (GROW) for the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), and Jack Minnis, SCEF research director, went to Laurel several times during the strike.

(Robert Analavage, assistant editor of The Southern Patriot, went with them. His article tells the story from the standpoint of both the black and white workers. It is hoped that this analysis will help all of us to understand the necessity for black-white unity in the struggle for economic and political democracy in America.)

By ROBERT ANALAVAGE
(Assistant Editor)

LAUREL, Miss. — The strike formally began in April, 1967, when a shop steward was fired by a foreman. The steward was backing two workers in their refusal to do work not included in their job descriptions.

But it began a long time before that. It began when Masonite brought in a team of efficiency experts to determine how to make the most profits with the fewest workers at the lowest cost. The experts suggested that the plant be totally reorganized, with automation the eventual goal.

Masonite calls its operation here the largest hardboard plant in the world; it produces a $250,000 weekly payroll for the Laurel area. The company and the local, largest in Mississippi, have had bitter struggles over the years, but nothing to rival this one.

This time the local, considered the most militant in the state and possibly in the South, saw the actions of the company as the opening of an effort to destroy the local completely. It did not hesitate to strike once it felt its interest threatened.

The strikers set up mass picket lines and refused to allow anyone, including management personnel, inside the plant. Hulse Hayes, a lawyer from the firm of the late anti-union Senator Robert Taft, went to court for Masonite, seeking an injunction against the union's activities.

A lower-court judge upheld the strikers' right to picket peacefully, so Hayes appealed to the Mississippi Supreme Court.

During the court proceedings the local argued that it had been pushed into the strike and so was unable to give the required ten days' notice before striking. The local subpoenaed documents and exposed Masonite's reorganization plan. The documents also showed that the company had hired Wackenhut guards 10 days before the strike began.

These guards come from the same private detective agency used by Governor Claude Kirk to police the state of Florida.

GUN-TOTING WACKENHUT GUARDS patrolled Masonite's Laurel plant during the seven-month strike (photo by Bob Analavage).

Still the Mississippi Supreme Court granted the injunction. The strike was ruled illegal, and it was made a crime for the international union or anyone else to support the strike. The workers carried on alone.

Wackenhut set up outposts all over the Masonite property, with shotgun-toting guards entrenched in sand-bagged bunkers. The plant looked more like a fortress than a factory.

The local had been through it all before. As recently as 1964 the men had conducted a bitter wildcat strike. They saw the 1967 walkout as just another in a series of battles between capital and labor, and described it in those terms.

As in the past, the workers felt that their union would stand firm. They had no doubt about the outcome. But one factor had changed since 1964. This was the growing number and strength of black workers and the efforts of the company to manipulate these employees.

In fact, some union officials said that Masonite had planted agents in the plant to discover ways to divide the workers. These agents seem to have decided that the long history of division between black and white people made it possible to pit them against each other.

In reality the Laurel local is two locals —one white, comprising 75 percent of the membership, the other 25 percent black. Until a few years ago the black workers were in a sub-local. Although more than 500 blacks were members of the local and felt that the 1500 white workers accepted them as fellow trade-unionists, they still did not feel they were really a part of the union.

No black people were elected to office in the local. Officials of the local now see this as a mistake. Some realize that a program of education might have brought about the unity they needed in this strike.

The Union's Position

In order to assess the whole situation better, Bob Zellner, Jack Minnis and I met with seven or eight members of the local's leadership—all white. The strike had been going on for months and the local found it difficult to get its side of the story to the public. The Laurel newspaper had even refused to sell the union space to explain its position.

Meanwhile, Masonite was recruiting strikebreakers from Georgia, Texas, and other parts of Mississippi.

"They had the whole Ole Miss football team scabbing in there," said J. D. Jolly, president of the local.

A Wackenhut guard had been slain the day we met with Jolly and other leaders of the union. The room was tense as we sat down with these men.

We were very frank about the fact that we were in the civil-rights movement. Minnis explained that at one time we had all worked for SNCC. He said we were now with SCEF and were interested in building unity between black and white working people in the South.

Minnis told the men that we wanted to help if we could, but we needed to understand the full nature of the strike. The men were silent for a moment.

Then Jolly spoke up: "We don't care who you are as long as you can help."

I think it is important to know Jolly. His life has been dedicated to the local and to the cause of trade-unionism. His name was in the headlines briefly in 1964 after a white union official was beaten by the Ku Klux Klan for backing a Negro in a grievance against the company. Jolly declared that the union would go to war with the Klan, if necessary, to stop further such acts.

Company's Position

CHICAGO — Masonite Corporation was asked to comment on statements made in this article. Their public-relations manager replied that "the article is untruthful to the point of being ridiculous." He did not say what was untrue.

He was frank about the local's history. "You have to understand the nature of the South to understand it," he said. "Because of this, we once had a sub-local. All colored, with their own officers. The different races did occasionally attend each other's meetings. There were three colored workers on the negotiating committee and they took part in contract deliberations.

"It wasn't integration; it wasn't segregation. Still . . . well, our international constitution prohibited segregation and, to be frank, we knew all the time what we had to do. Then came the Civil Rights Act (1964) and a suit was filed by six of our brothers—one white and five colored.

"When we integrated, the whites had the numerical strength. They were 75 per cent of the union. Candidates were put up for office and everybody voted along racial lines. None of the colored candidates were elected and they never ran again."

Jolly calls that election a mistake. He says: "I, from a practical standpoint, thinking of the union first, don't want to freeze the colored out, because we need them. If some of our colored members hadn't broken this strike and gone back to work this strike would be over."

We asked what could be done to avoid similar splits in the future. "Only thing I can see is that we've got to form a coalition," Jolly went on. "White and colored in the local will have to get together and come up with some candidates from both races and everybody will have to back them. Otherwise this thing will continue to split us."

The Need for Coalition

Coalition. A magic word these days. Quite simply it means the coming together of people with similar problems to fight a common enemy. It does not mean love or brotherhood or integration, although it could mean or lead to all of these things.

But coalition does require two ingredients, and one of these is strength. The mostly white local did have strength and had shown it many times in previous strikes. The question is: Did the black minority in the union have any strength?

I believe Jolly answered that when he said, "If colored members had not gone back to work the strike would be over."

The majority of the black workers had used their strength, but they used it against the union. They gave reasons for this, which I will go into shortly, but first we need to stress that the black unionists did not act as a unit. Although about 300 blacks helped to break the strike, about 200 supported it.

The other ingredient needed for a coalition is trust. And the black people who refused to take part in the strike simply did not trust the white members of the union.

When we talked with the black men who went back to work, they said there was a slight possibility that they and other non-striking blacks would meet with the white union leaders to discuss an arrangement whereby the black workers would honor the strike. But, said the black workers, any such meeting would have to be on the initiative of the whites. They would make no effort to set up the meeting.

We reported this conversation to Jolly and other union leaders. We pointed out that we were not in any sense representing the black workers; that they were not our clients and we had absolutely no influence in the black community. We stressed to them that they would have to gain the trust and confidence of the black workers themselves.

Jolly and the others asked us what we thought they should do. We told them they should contact the leaders of the black strikebreakers. They asked us whom they should talk with. We told them they should know who the leaders of the black strikebreakers were, and added that we could not act as go-betweens.

When they mentioned "good friends" they had in the black community, we suggested that these "good friends" were probably not the leaders of the militant workers. We said that a new spirit was abroad in the black community, and it would be up to them to figure out how to deal with that spirit in the interest of unity.

Jolly and the other said they would consider what we had told them and that they would try to work out something. However, Jolly said that it wasn't just a simple matter of the union leadership going to the black strikebreakers and bargaining over concessions.

The union members honoring the strike had already taken the necessary steps to impose sanctions, if they chose to do so, against those who had abandoned the strike. Jolly emphasized that the black strikers had also voted for these steps.

"Our local is a democracy and we have to abide by the majority will," he said.

The Strikebreakers' View

The meeting we had had with the black strikebreakers revealed how they felt about the whole business. One of their supporters was Mrs. Susie Ruffin, a veteran in the freedom movement and now a member of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party (MFDP).

She is very militant but was opposed to the strike. She arranged for us to meet some of the black strikebreakers in her home. They agreed to talk but only on condition that their names be withheld. Their names are not important; their views are.

They had supported strikes before, including wildcats. One man who had walked the picket line for six months in 1964 said:

"What did it get us? Nothing changed; we were still treated like second-class citizens, like niggers. Ain't no Negro union officials. There's only four black shop stewards, and they don't have authority over whites.

"The union never asks us for help until something like this comes up. To put it right down, Negroes are just sick and tired of being fooled by whites. But no more. I'm so tired of my people being walked on."

We asked another man what he thought about the union. Mrs. Ruffin broke in: "It's a den of Kluxers." The man agreed with her. Yet, when we ran down a list of union officials, he and the others referred to only one of them as a Klansman. They called all the local officers "good union men."

Bob Zellner, a native of Alabama who still has relatives in the Klan, had raised the question of the Klan with the union leadership. They admitted that there were Klan members in the local.

Herbert Ishee, the financial secretary, added: "There are some Klan on the negotiating committee. They're good unionists, pretty good boys, but I don't believe in their politics."

As for the widely held belief in the black community that the Klan controls the local, Jolly said: "Sure, we have Klansmen in the local but they don't control it. I'll fight anyone—any outside group—that tries to take over this local."

We asked one of the black workers why he refused to take part in the strike. He said: "You know, after the Civil Rights Act the company integrated the facilities at the plant. Washrooms and showers. The whites kicked up a fuss.

"I don't appreciate a man using me . . . saying we're together when there's a strike and then kicking up a fuss because we're using the same facilities. Another thing, the whites didn't even consult us when this strike began. Not one word, like they figured we'd support it anyway. I didn't desert the union; the union deserted me."

None of the black workers considered themselves anti-union. They said: "A worker has to be in a union for his own security. We have good wages and job security only because of the union's work."

However, all of them were highly critical of Local 5-443 for allowing segregated job classifications. They all said they wanted to stay in the union, "if only it would change."

We asked them if they would be willing to meet with the white unionists to try to work out such differences. With the balance of power they held in this strike, there was a possibility they could win concessions they wanted from the local, since the whites had now seen the need for unity.

If an understanding was reached between the two groups, it could be guaranteed by the strength of the blacks; the white workers would know that only united action would bring gains from the company in future disputes.

Here was shown the need for a black caucus within the union. Blacks have usually mistrusted white people in similar situations because so many promises have been made and then broken when the black people were no longer considered necessary. A caucus within the union would make sure that there would be no backsliding on promises made and agreements reached between the black and white workers.

However, this did not appear to be in the minds of the black people, as reflected by these comments:

Mrs. Ruffin—"If only those white people would come to us equal and bargain. . . ."

A worker—"I've seen something of these whites for years. They can't be trusted. I see no reason to talk with them."

Another worker—"If they would come to us and ask us like men."

Setting a Pattern

In Jackson, where we talked with Claude Ramsey, head of the Mississippi AFL-CIO, he gave us a larger perspective on the Laurel strike. He saw the Masonite strike as part of a plan to destroy trade-unions in the state. He believed the Mississippi Manufacturers' Association was involved.

"Masonite is the beginning of a pattern," he declared. "This local has always been radical and a thorn in the company's side. They've had some bad strikes down there. If they destroy this local, unionism in Mississippi will be set back decades. Masonite laid a trap for them and they walked right into it."

What the company had done was to win many allies in the black community by upgrading a few blacks in the plant and ending segregation in the washrooms.

Minnis described how it worked in the Patriot last month: "Thus when management was confident that it had the loyalty of enough black workers it began upgrading black workers in a way that was certain to drive the white workers into a wildcat."

Jolly had told us that this very upgrading of blacks had caused friction with the whites, but he also admitted that the black men had previously "had the dirtiest, the filthiest, the roughest jobs."

However, Masonite is no crusader for the rights of black people. It has a plant in the Union of South Africa where its black workers are the most exploited in the world. It also needs to be pointed out that the company was simply complying with a U. S. Government order when it ended segregation in the washrooms.

Claude Ramsey arranged for us to talk with E. K. Collins, attorney for Local 5-443. Collins is also state senator from Jones County. He is most widely known to the civil-rights movement as attorney for the regular Democratic Party in Mississippi, which fought off the challenge of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party at the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City in 1964. He has a reputation for being a strong trade-union supporter.

"I signed the first union card in this state," he told us proudly. "I once worked for John L. Lewis (of the United Mine Workers)." He said that as a boy "I had a job carrying water for the workers—white and colored."

Senator Collins said he had been one of the original organizers of the Laurel local and obtained its charter. "It was the first union charter in the state," he added.

The attorney said he agreed with Ramsey's charge of a conspiracy to bust all unions in Mississippi. "No doubt about it," he declared. "If they break this union, the shipbuilders in Pascagoula are next and after that the paper mills in Natchez and Moss Point."

"You see, there are all kinds of companies up North that want to bring plants down South because of cheap labor. And every Chamber of Commerce is backing them."

(We were also told that all elements of the local power structure, including the Laurel Chamber of Commerce, backed Masonite in the strike; indeed, "the city attorney represents the company in disputes with the workers.")

We asked Collins about the Klan elements in Local 5-443. He said he had evidence that there were 65 Klan members in the union, but he also pointed out that the local had published a manifesto against the Klan in the Laurel newspaper.

The Strike Continues

As the strike continued, there were bombings and at least five killings which authorities blamed on some of the strikers. However, the black workers told us that none of this was aimed at them. The violence seemed directed at whites breaking the strike.

At the height of the violence, the Mississippi Highway Patrol sent extra men to Laurel and the National Guard was placed on alert.

Soon there were 900 men working in the plant, which was reported working at 45 per cent of capacity. The 900 men were about equally divided among white unionists who had returned to work, strikebreakers (white) brought in from other areas, and black unionists who had refused to join the strike.

But Masonite was being hurt. A Standard & Poor's bulletin reported at the end of the summer that there had been a substantial decrease in Masonite earnings due in part to strikes in Ohio and in Laurel. Standard & Poor's also stated that Masonite had sold more than 210,000 acres of prime Mississippi timber to St. Regis Paper Co. for $35 million.

"The colored workers (who went back to work) make up the numerical difference and give the company hope of winning the strike," Jolly said several weeks before the end of the strike.

We talked with people in SNCC, the MFDP and the Delta Ministry about the possibility of working together to build a black-white coalition to aid the local. They all saw possibilities in the situation, but were busy with other things they felt were more important.

Two weeks before the strike ended, a statement did come from the MFDP, which is made up almost wholly of black people. The full text is printed elsewhere on this page, but the following portion is worth quoting here:

"It is to Masonite's advantage to emphasize the KKK element in the union. This keeps the black and white workers apart. We refuse to swallow Masonite's claim of complete KKK control of the union.

"We have found that labels, whether Communist or KKK, prevent people from thinking and cover up the real issues . . . If Masonite can kill the union in Laurel, this will set back both Negro and white workers 30 years."

The Strike is Broken

On December 12, 1967, after seven and a half months, the Laurel strike came to an end. In San Francisco, an agreement was reached between the international union, the Masonite Corp., and the federal mediation service.

We happened to be in the Union hall the day the agreement was announced.

"Ain't it a shame," one rank-and-file member told us, "we don't even get to vote on it."

J. D. Jolly and the rest of local 5-443's officials were removed from office and the local was placed in trusteeship, which meant that all property, finances and other assets of the local came under the complete control of the international.

A man of about 50 said, "one of these days it's all coming to a head and it's going to be settled with guns. There's going to be one final battle between capital and labor."

The agreement was explained to the Patriot by Ronald F. Roley, Portland, Ore., international president of the union, on the ground that "our aim was to save as many jobs and as many benefits as possible under the circumstances. A preferential hiring list was set up for those men still out at the time of the settlement." (There were over 1,200 men, more than half of the local, still on strike when the agreement was signed.)

As for the company's reorganization plan, Roley said, "we'll try to resolve whatever we can."

Members of the local scoff at this. They described the agreement to me as "a sellout, a sweetheart contract." Sources within the local also say they have learned that the militants who led the strike will not be rehired—ever. Additionally, all strikebreakers will keep their jobs.

What is clear is that Masonite exploited the social divisions between the unionists masterfully, like pawns in a giant chess game. Whether the same tactics will be used in other areas, as Claude Ramsey and E. K. Collins predicted, seems hardly open to question.

The burning resentments of black workers exist everywhere; the failure, even the refusal, of some white workers to cope with this also exists everywhere. If the tragedy of Laurel is not to be repeated, this situation must be corrected.

Blacks have said they will not initiate any reconciliation because they feel they have been betrayed too many times in the past. Therefore, whites will have to make the first move. Unity remains the working men's only protection; otherwise they will continue to be the victims.

Masonite can now dictate conditions and wages and, as the directors of that company can tell you, it will be a long time before the workers of Laurel will again have the strength to challenge them.

This article describes some of the work of Grass Roots Organizing Work (GROW), a SCEF project which is helping poor white people in the Deep South organize for political and economic power, in coalition with the black movement. The article is reprinted from The Southern Patriot, SCEF's monthly newspaper. For subscriptions ($3) or a sample copy, write:

THE SOUTHERN CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL FUND
3210 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky. 40211

The MFDP Statement

The MFDP is investigating the strike in Laurel, Mississippi by the International Woodworkers of America (IWA) local against the Masonite corporation, because this strike affects every member of the MFDP in Mississippi.

If Masonite can kill the union in Laurel, this will set back both Negro and white workers 30 years. Whatever the result of the strike, it will be copied by management and members of the Mississippi Management Association to crush union organizing in Mississippi. Without unions, working people can be fired without cause by management, they lose their right to collective bargaining, better working conditions, higher wages and decent vacations with pay.

Members of both races are working at Masonite and are also on strike. Masonite claims that the union is completely controlled by the KKK. This places Negro employees in the unfortunate position of having to choose between the KKK or Masonite. This is too simple and too frightening to be true.

It is to Masonite's advantage to emphasize the KKK element in the union. This keeps black and white workers apart. Since 1964 the union has held integrated meetings, yet it was only since the strike began in April that Masonite gave Negro workers many good jobs previously reserved for whites. But it is important to understand the history of the KKK's power in Jones County. This power affects not only the union but Masonite and every important economic and political institution in Jones County.

The FDP is and has always been on the side of FREE trade unionism. We refuse to swallow Masonite's claim of complete KKK control of the union. We have found that labels, whether Communist or KKK, prevent people from thinking and cover up the real issues.

The Klan issue should not force Negro workers to reject unionism. A man should not be deprived of his right to a job or a right to belong to a union solely because he is a member of the KKK. Only if we protect the rights of all men to freedom of association and speech, no matter how unpopular their cause, will our own rights be preserved.

Movement Failed on Laurel Strike

On December 12, over 1,000 Masonite workers had their union put into trusteeship and their 7½ month long strike sold out. The local Laurel movement that day was very concerned because some preacher had thrown a wrench into a planned Christmas boycott of downtown Laurel aimed at getting some Negroes hired in the stores.

It would be dishonest, however, to say that the local movement had no position on the strike that ended—for all practical purposes—in the busting of the most militant union in Mississippi. The Laurel movement did have a position: it urged black workers to scab for Masonite, and did so for the whole length of the strike.

A main argument used to justify support for and encouragement of the scabs has been that this was the first time most of these black men had "ever stood up." But when you have on your side the Mayor, the Mississippi Supreme Court, the Mississippi Chamber of Commerce, the Mississippi Association of Manufacturers, the regional NLRB, the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, the International Woodworkers of America, the city police, the state police, the National Guard, the Wackenhut guards and, in the center of it all, the Masonite Corporation . . . well, hell, what kind of a "stand" have you really taken?

What essentially happened is that Masonite wanted to get rid of the union, and felt that they needed a sizable number of workers who would be willing to scab on a union-initiated wildcat. They tried to do this among the black workers by integrating washrooms and showers. The strategy worked, and a union that the black scabs said "was good on fighting for economic issues and working conditions" was destroyed.

Now at least some of us should be able to see, at this late date in the history of U.S. capitalism, that the forces of the corporations, their various State apparatuses (especially the courts and the police), and their 'friends' in organized labor (which is most of the international unions), are never going to be doing good for workers. So if we want something better than what we have, it means we must look to workers themselves. With workers' unity and a good program of struggle, the international unions can be taken over, and the corporations and their state beaten.

But unity and a fighting program is exactly what the movement in Laurel did not have.

When Rap Brown talks about the need for developing an ideology to prevent one section of dispossessed people from oppressing another, he's not just whistling Dixie. And the movement's got to go further than statements and proclamations. Because big corporations will be trying to work the "Masonite Plan" for breaking unions all over the South, now that it's worked in Laurel.

Which means that instead of ignoring unorganized workers, we begin to organize them. That instead of ignoring strikes, we support them. That instead of playing ball with the union piecards and misleaders (otherwise known as the 'labor lieutenants of capital') we fight them to the finish. And the last of these means that we take jobs in plants to begin organizing a caucus of rank-and-file workers to take over the unions so as to be better able to wage war on the bosses.

If this seems a sensible approach to a real problem, then it also means certain things for the 'movement'. It means that staff people be required to spend a part of each year working on a job. It means that SNCC and the MFDP find room on their list of 'priorities' for organizing black caucuses in unions like the one in Laurel. It means that SDS find the 'time' to support strikes going on right under their noses, (like the recent 60-day transit strike in Madison, Wisc., which the militant students didn't find time to support because they were too busy with other 'more important' matters, like protesting Dow's presence on their campus).

There is no doubt that Southern (and U.S.) workers are unhappy about their condition. There is a major question as to whether some sections of the left (including the movement) are willing to get their hands dirty and calloused enough to organize that discontent into positive and direct struggle against the corporations and their state. If the movement isn't willing, then the Laurel bust is just a taste of what's coming.

FRED LACEY
New Orleans, La.

(The writer of this letter, a former CORE field secretary in Louisiana, is now a dockworker who is active in the Progressive Labor Party in New Orleans.)

it all. Just before the vote, a local minister wrote a piece for the paper entitled, "How will the Klan Run Denham Springs?" The citizens decided it wouldn't run the place at all. They defeated every candidate suspected of having the support of the Klan. Mayor Allen Scivicque had been elected in 1964—when there was no Klan issue—by a margin of only 39 votes. But in the 1966 election—in which the Klan question became the issue—Scivicque, opposed by the Klan, won by a vote of 1,041 to 654.

After the election, Denham Springs was rewarded with an insight that is given only to the strong. "By their own admission after the election," one citizen said, "they [the Klan] didn't have but 17 members inside the city limits. Before the election you'd have thought they had 1,700. Personally, I think the election knocked them in the head out here."

□ □ □

Unlike the situation in Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, a known alliance with the Klan is likely to harm a politician in Georgia, unless he at least goes through the formality of shunning it.

In the 1966 Democratic gubernatorial contest between Ellis Arnall and Lester Maddox, it was just generally taken for granted that Maddox was the Klan's candidate. Speeches were made on his behalf at Klan rallies, where pro-Lester bumper strips and placards were also distributed. Maddox was sensitive enough to the feelings of most Georgians to know that if he could not go so far as to repudiate Klan support, at least he must try to share the mud. So he accused Arnall of being a life-time Klansman. For Georgians who remembered how Arnall, as governor in 1946, had crushed the Klan of that day, it was an accusation difficult to believe. But the point of the episode is that Maddox felt called upon to try to drag Arnall under the Klan umbrella, too. In Georgia politics, it is not a good place for one man to be caught all alone. (In fact, it wasn't a good place to be caught even twenty years ago, the first time Arnall was accused of being a Klansman by a political opponent.) The Klan knows this, too. Although Klan Czar Shelton not only says publicly he is solidly behind Wallace, to the point of soliciting funds for his various campaigns, Shelton's counterpart in Georgia, Calvin Craig, knew better than to help hang the label of Kluxmanship around Maddox's shoulders. The Georgia Klan refused to endorse Maddox or Republican Bo Callaway in the general election.

This is not to say that to be known as a Klansman is death in Georgia politics; it is only to risk losing that marginal bloc that teeters between orthodoxy and rebellion. For example, KKK leader Craig failed in his try to be elected to the Fulton County (Atlanta) Democratic Executive Committee in 1966; but he didn't lose by much. He received 3,200 votes in the Fourth Ward, which was only 272 votes under the winner. In a race that close, it is not even certain that it wasn't personality or something else than Klan membership that made the marginal difference.

When poverty administrator Sargent Shriver turned down Craig's bid for appointment to a local OEO community action board, the Grand Dragon's useworn retort was that President Johnson's whole anti-poverty program was an idea stolen from a "copyrighted book of an international Communist Jew," anyway. The Model Cities idea is apparently of acceptable origin, however, so acceptable, in fact, that Craig got himself elected to the project's six-member biracial Executive Board. He will represent one of the half-dozen Atlanta neighborhoods to be rebuilt in 1968. More recently Craig announced he was resigning from the Klan amid much speculation that he will run for Sheriff of Fulton County.

As soon as he had received the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, Gov. Maddox appointed a former law partner of James of the Na be vice ch cratic Exe indicate K influence Allen desc udice, ext competenc ex-partner whit differe

James H. G
DAILY HERA man; Gray tials or even was the un
earlier Demo president of
of America.

Although t demonstrated kidnappings futile to atter ence" within ses of non-Kl
ing, law-abidi
for years hel
social views w
Klan. Roy Harri of political de talking about, b Georgia affairs practical limits
people think th
dignity," he told briskly around a
"They talk Cons
the nigger ques
rights but they n
question will neve issues never die."

For more than Talmadge, who us question" rather obliquely mention
cessantly talks of
Neither Lester Ma
tional notoriety wi handle threats to away, once a close back in the "nigger

see pp 15

of James R. Venable, Imperial Wizard of the National Knights of the KKK, to be vice chairman of the Georgia Democratic Executive Committee. Does this indicate Klan influence, or merely the influence of what Atlanta Mayor Ivan Allen described as the "rabble of prejudice, extremism, buffoonery, and incompetency?" The presence of Venable's ex-partner could not be interpreted one whit differently from the appointment of James H. Gray, publisher of the Albany DAILY HERALD, as the party's state chairman; Gray has no known Klan credentials or even indirect affiliations, but he was the unsuccessful candidate in the earlier Democratic primary of Roy Harris, president of the White Citizens' Council of America.

Although the Klan's efficiency is well demonstrated in organizing murderous kidnappings or highway shootings, it is futile to attempt to measure its "influence" within a society where great masses of non-Klan, church-going, tax-paying, law-abiding people hold and have for years held identical political and social views with those preached by the Klan. Roy Harris, that clever little master of political deceit, knew what he was talking about, because after a lifetime in Georgia affairs he had discovered the practical limits of respectability: "Some people think the nigger is beneath their dignity," he told me cheerfully, speaking briskly around a cheap black Tampa cigar. "They talk Constitution but they look at the nigger question. They talk state's rights but they mean nigger. The nigger question will never be a dead issue. Some issues never die."

For more than three years, Senator Talmadge, who used to treat the "nigger question" rather openly, has not even obliquely mentioned it; instead, he incessantly talks of mobs in the streets. Neither Lester Maddox, who gained national notoriety with his pistol and axe-handle threats to Negroes, nor Bo Callaway, once a close associate of Talmadge back in the "nigger question" days, even hinted at the existence of such a thing in their campaigns for the governor's seat; instead, both dwelt heavily on anti-federalism. If there is any interpreting to be done, apparently Georgians know how to do it. But in any event, there is no sign that the Klan set the tone of this last important election. Further evidence of the impotence of the Klan in statewide races was the fact that Peter Zack Geer, Georgia's lieutenant governor, who had developed a reputation over the years of speaking the harsh anti-Negro language beloved by many rednecks and all Klansmen, was defeated by George T. Smith, a moderate.

It is the white-collar haters who keep Georgia in hot water; the John Birch Society - "Let Freedom Ring" - White Citizens claque that, for example, took control of Americus and crushed every voice of moderation, literally driving out some of the town's leading citizens who had seemed inclined to negotiate with their Negro neighbors.

It is to this crowd, more than the Klan, that Maddox forges his philosophical cuffs. "The Let Freedom Ring" message that so infuriated the Georgia American Legion by chiding it for favoring the importation of Communist merchandise—this message was beamed from business property of Maddox. So was the "Let Freedom Ring" message opposing certain tobacco companies for using Yugoslavia tobacco as a mix.

"Camel-Tempo-Winston-Salem Red tobacco. Don't inhale 'em."

It may be a nutty limeric, but it's better than a flogging.

□ □ □

Periodically, leaders of Mississippi proclaim that the Klan has either died out altogether or been surpressed beyond recognition, and almost invariably these claims are offset by new Klan violence. In the closing months of 1967, local officials said the Klan was moribund in the Jackson area. Yet within the last eight months there have been at least a dozen bombings—including two synogogues and a rabbi's home—burnings and shootings in the Jackson and Meridian areas, all of which look like Klan work. The last outbreak (as of this writing) came on June 30, 1968, when a Klansman—Thomas Albert Tarrants III, 22, was caught carrying a box containing 29 sticks of dynamite, toward the home of a Meridian businessman (a Jew) who had helped raise money to re-build bombed Negro churches. Tarrants who had once been a cell-mate of Sam H. Bowers, Imperial Wizard of the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, tried to fight the lawmen off with a sub-machine gun, but was felled by ten bullets. Mississippi officials, embarrassed by the revival of violence, say it could happen anywhere.

The nice people of Mississippi are convinced that the Klan has no significant influence on public opinion and politics. Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, whom this reporter talked with a few weeks before his death, was looked upon in Mississippi politics as a moderate of sorts. "There is no room in Mississippi for black power or white bullies," he once said in a fairly good statement of whatever moderation can be found in Mississippi; it can be translated as signifying a deep yearning for a return for the way things were before the civil rights movement, without attempting violently to restore the old order. Gartin was frequently identified in the northern press as typical of the "new" Mississippi politician. This was his opinion of the influence of the Klan:

"The Klan doesn't have so much molding influence. Public opinion reacts in favor of the Klan. The KKK profits from the so-called white backlash; our people have had a bellyfull of dictatorial bureaucracy. The Klan appeals to the person with less education. It has more of a frontal attack, although not all Klans are that way. A politician could denounce the Klan in Mississippi and survive; it isn't that powerful. The Klan knows I disagree with it. I believe you should do things in the light, but at the same time there are some good people who believe its end justify its means. [His emphasis supplied with sympathetic nods.] The great overwhelming majority of the Klansmen will obey the law. A lot of my friends—and I don't deal in the past—believe that the KKK is the right organization to cope with what a lot of us feel is the encroachment of federal government. There are other people who feel that the Citizens' Council is the right organization through which to deal with federal encroachment. There are others who feel that other organizations are the right organizations. It's sort of like one person saying that the Masonic Lodge is best, another that the Presbyterian church is best. One appeals to the less educated, the other to the sophisticated, but that is not saying one is bad and the other is good." [Emphasis supplied.]

Gartin himself was a member of the Citizens' Council, as was just about every important state official in Mississippi at one time, but claimed in this interview that he was no longer active. He considered the Citizens' Council to have been "very effective" in opposing civil rights.

It is plain from his remarks that this "moderate" was no thundering opponent of the Klan and that he, in fact, considered himself in a kind of casual alliance with the Klan against a common foe. Ironically, his attitude toward the Klan seemed to be, in fact, more tolerant than that of Sen. James Eastland, the bete blanc of the civil rights movement, who frequently and publicly accused his 1966 Republican opponent, Prentiss Walker, of being the candidate of the Klan, with the intimation (if not the statement) that this was bad. This could be justified on the basis of campaign strategy, of course; since most Klan followers already were inclined to suspect Eastland of liberal leanings, the senator could not hope to win many of them back but he could, by linking the Klan with his opponent, hope to claim for his own the washed middle-class and the planters who make up the large majo deplore the in the muc

ing the oth saying that of the KKK
eral's list
good citize

The Klan's affairs are a though it ce
in Mississipp take public the Klan usu after-dark th success. For Klan strewed sippi, with papers calling
"who have th
the public an race of people tioned but the reference to th
the city fathers and Head Star complained tha discharged from factories for be claimed that the
to NAACP mem
Chamber of C all the charges
kind of midnig
derous leaflets m
mosphere in whi want to do better carrying through to this extent the
in small towns.
scientifically esta
official in Mississi white and anti-N hard-pressed to leaflet barrage ha
ing local political

A sustained bar widespread, succe
would be somethi
tion arose in Laur
White Knights of t

large majority of Mississippians and who deplore the aesthetics of midnight murder in the mud. (In 1964, Eastland was playing the other side, sending out a letter saying that the United Klans and Knights of the KKK are not on the Attorney General's list and are thereby worthy of good citizens' attention.)

The Klan's efforts to influence political affairs are almost consistently crude. Although it certainly has enough standing in Mississippi to permit its officials to take public positions on political issues, the Klan usually uses its old system of after-dark threats, with no remarkable success. For instance, early in 1966, the Klan strewed lawns in Greenville, Mississippi, with single-page mimeographed papers calling for the election of officials "who have the guts to stand up before the public and say, 'I am for the white race of people.' " No names were mentioned but the broadside opened with a reference to the fact that the mayor and the city fathers had met with the NAACP and Head Start officials. The Klan also complained that white people had been discharged from their jobs in some local factories for belonging to the Klan, and claimed that the vacated jobs were given to NAACP members and COFO agitators. Chamber of Commerce officials said all the charges were lies. Insofar as this kind of midnight distribution of slanderous leaflets must make an irritable atmosphere in which even politicians who want to do better must have more trouble carrying through their good resolutions, to this extent the Klan has some success in small towns. But since it is all but scientifically established that no white official in Mississippi is anything but pro-white and anti-NAACP, one would be hard-pressed to conclude that a Klan leaflet barrage had any effect in changing local political thinking.

A sustained barrage, coupled with a widespread, successful recruiting drive, would be something else. Such a situation arose in Laurel, the capital of the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. (The White Knights, strictly a Mississippi organization, have been active in these counties: Jones, Forrest, Covington, Smith, Jasper, Wayne, Newton, Neshoba, Webster, and Calhoun. At one time they claimed 800 members in Jones County (Laurel), but newsmen and lawmen in the region—while acknowledging the possibility of that as a one-time figure—are unanimous in their estimation that recently the Klan has "lost a lot." Some say the White Knights are now inoperative under that name.)

Recent court and grand jury decisions in Laurel are said to have been directly influenced by the Klan, although sometimes the influence was of a negative sort. Much of this is rumor that cannot be supported. For example, it is widely assumed in Laurel that one of the local judges threw out a case against a city official because the charges had been trumped up by the Klan. The judge was reportedly opposed to the Klan because his opponent in a recent race had been supported by the Klan. Thus Klan "influence" of one sort or another is thoroughly intertwined in local politics.

Laurel Mayor Henry Bucklew's problems with the Jones County Grand Jury are believed by the mayor and his supporters, including executives of the local newspaper, to stem from Bucklew's opposition to the Klan. In October, 1965, Bucklew offered a $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of persons for the burning of any church, house, or business or for shooting into a residence. At the time he made the offer, he said that "99 out of 100 Mississippians do not believe in bombings, or shooting into homes." Even assuming that this was no effort at a practical estimate it is not a comforting thought that a Mississippi insider would suggest—even rhetorically—21,000 of his fellow citizens (Mississippi's last census showed 2,100,000 residents) are, if not Klan members, fully capable of participating in the most robust Klan exercises. Bucklew's undisguised nervousness at the time he offered the reward is significant. "What I am about to say could mean the end of my political career," he said, before announcing the reward, "or its actual beginning." If he felt the pro-Klan sympathies to be strong enough possibly to endanger his political career, he also felt his life in danger. "I'll speak now, knowing that my life might be in danger from a crack-pot on either side of life's main stream." He has been threatened with a tarring and feathering; he believes he has been spared the actual attempt "because you can trace feathers."

Eleven months later, a grand jury indicted Bucklew for "false pretense" involving a gift to Magnolia Boys Town, though no money was missing. The town was divided over the question of whether the Klan was so thoroughly represented on the grand jury as to make the indictment simply harassment. Bucklew's announcemen of the reward was made over television at the burning peak of Klan activities in that area. The Klan put out a letter saying Bucklew had been a member of the organization but had broken away because he wanted money. Bucklew retorted that he had never belonged to the Klan.

Bucklew believes the Klan has a strong influence on public opinion, though not a determining influence on any issue where feeling is sharply divided. The Klan has boasted in the Laurel area that "if you join, you will never be indicted; if you are indicted, you will never be convicted." Bucklew and others believe this is a safe boast to make, since Klan membership is wide enough to assure good chances of at least one member getting on a jury. In the Laurel area, the mayor believes the Klan can sway 40 per cent of the people; statewide, he would put it at 20 per cent. Officials and newsmen interviewed elsewhere in the state, however, believe Bucklew is influenced by his own troubles to set an excessively high figure. All agree that some state legislators, especially those from South Mississippi, are not unsympathetic to the Klan. State Rep. Billy Joe Lee of Lawrence County (Southeast Mississippi) refused to confirm or deny a House Un-American Activities Committee report that listed him as an officer of the White Knights.

Another victim of the Klan's infamy attack through newsletters has been J. W. West, editor and publisher of the Laurel LEADER-CALL, a newspaper that has won a number of professional awards for courageous reporting (it was bombed on May 8, 1964; no arrests were made). One of the recent newsletters given to this reporter by West reads:

THE CITIZEN-PATRIOT

A Newsletter dedicated to the Truth and the Christian Civilization . . ."-where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is Liberty." II Cor. 3,17. The most vicious and disruptive Mayoralty election within the memory of the oldest residents of Laurel has finally passed, leaving hurt and bitterness in its wake. Regardless of how one may feel regarding the qualifications and personalities of the various candidates, there can be no doubt that the prime mover of the chaos and confusion, which was introduced into the mayor's race, was none other than the chief agent of and for communist propaganda in Laurel, J. W. West.

The good-natured, tolerant, Christian citizens of Laurel should realize that there can never be any real peace or tranquility in the conduct of our public affairs as long as this alien intruder, West, is in a position to disrupt our local harmony. If he is not out campaigning against private property, he is agitating against our local form of municipal government; if he is not encouraging and subsidizing the blackamoors to rise up and demonstrate, he is stirring up hatred and animosity in our local ssissippi) refused to louse Un-American report that listed

the White Knights.
the Klan's infamy
etters has been J.
publisher of the
a newspaper that professional awards ing (it was bombed
rrests were made).
ewsletters given to reads:

PATRIOT

licated to the tian Civilization
irit of the Lord
" II Cor. 3,17.
and disruptive within the ldest residents
y passed, leav-
ess in its wake.
one may feel lifications and e various can-be no doubt
er of the chaos
ich was introyor's race, was he chief agent munist propa-
V. West.

olerant, Chris-Laurel should can never be tranquility in public affairs intruder, West,
srupt our local
not out cam-vate property,
inst our local government; if g and subsidiz-to rise up and s stirring up
y in our local elections. Agitation, dissention, (sic) propaganda; heating and stirring the pot of public affairs to the boiling point. These are standard methods of communist subversion, and J. W. West is past master at their application. He takes the freedom of the press and uses it as an unbridled license to work against the dignity and stability of our community life. J. W. West is a highly trained communist, well versed in the art of destructive propaganda. He has presumed to insinuate his revolutionary programs here upon us, because of his imagined superiority which his intellectual training gives to him. In this connection, it would be well if we would all turn to the Second Chapter of the First Book of Corinthians, to understand what Satanic Plans these communists such as West and his associates in Washington, New York, and Montreal have in store for us.

A local newspaper is undoubtedly a convenience, but when it it is in the hands of a cunning and brilliant agent of Satan such as J. W. West, it is a real and positive danger to a Christian community.

THE CITIZEN-PATRIOT is calling once again for a widespread rejection on the part of the general population of Laurel and Jones County, of J. W. West and his foreign-controlled communist propaganda organ, the Laurel LEADER-CALL. We are asking all honest citizens and merchants to cancel their subscriptions and their advertising in this dangerous institution. The subversion of our community is too high a price to pay for the meager information which they provide. As long as the operation of the Laurel LEADER-CALL is continued on the present basis, the communists have a beachhead here in Laurel, from which they can expand into another Selma March or Bogalusa Demonstration. Let us ask ourselves, "Is it really worth it?" Is not the peace and dignity of Laurel worth more to we (sic) citizens and our children than the continued operation of J. W. West and his communist propaganda mill?

To cancel your subscription, Dial 428-0551 (office), or 428-0397 (home). Do it now, won't you please?

LAUREL NEEDS A LOCAL NEWSPAPER.

That may seem a bit crude, but efforts to sway public opinion through broadsides of this quality have more impact than sophisticates from larger cities might suppose. West claims that the Klan has done "everything they could to wreck this paper. They've sent letters to barbershops, beauty shops, merchants saying I was linked to the FBI and things like that. They've put out the same kind of scurrilous sheets about Jewish merchants in Hattiesburg. I think some people who don't know me are influenced.

"It's difficult to go up and down the street saying 'did you see the damn letter' and add 'I never belonged to anything but the Kiwanis Club.' We have a lot of people with limited education who believe what the Klan circulates."

The effectiveness of the Klan is mainly evidenced in arousing spite toward vulnerable civic leaders — as incumbent mayors and newspaper publishers are notably vulnerable—rather than in swaying an election. The basic independence of Americans, even southern Americans, is seen in the fact that while many of them may join the Klan in the perverse pleasures that arise from an orgy of spleen, they will not go so far as to follow the recommendations of the Klan in an election. It appears that for most people, even in such a troubled community as Laurel, the long-range welfare of the community is considered above the momentary thrill of individual pique. Thus, in the election preceding these interviews, the Klan had not been at all effective. Only one man with the Klan's support was elected, and it is not at all certain that he wanted the organization's backing. The same thing can probably be said for the success, fractional or total, of Klan candidates throughout the South—the Maddoxes and the Jim Johnsons—that while the Klan may have supported them, this was not the reason for their getting as far as they did.

Angered by Washington and by the appearance in Mississippi of civil rights workers, many substantial people of Laurel actually went through the tedious ceremony necessary for joining the Klan, but it was not long until they saw that this was a profitless indulgence. Most of them, according to those this reporter talked with, have long since resigned from the membership they took out a year or two ago. The Citizens' Council, which had been strong in Laurel, lost all its upper-middle class members to the Klan for a time, but now the Citizens Council is reviving again. The attorney who represents the Klan in Laurel is helping to revive the Citizens' Council. Merchants were influenced to join the Klan because they thought it would throw business their way. Professional men were sometimes influenced by the idea that the Klan was a legitimate expression of regional unrest. Subsequent acts of violence changed their minds irrevocably.

Mississippi has other emotional groups. At Corinth, Mississippi, the PTA was attacked by "Let Freedom Ring" — one of the very few signs of LFR activity in the state. Another of the small hate groups is the Association of Christian Conservatives (ACC), which can at its peak depend on a turnout of 100 to a rally. At last report, Elmore Greaves of Madison County was president. Greaves is reportedly also one of the key men behind the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race in Mississippi (APWR). Typical of the activities of both the ACC and Americans for the Preservation of the White Race in 1966 was a rally at which John Rarick was the principal speaker, and the topic, not clearly defined, seemed to revolve around the treachery of some Southerners. Senator Eastland and Governor Paul Johnson were denounced as being too moderate. The APWR had earlier mailed out a leaflet describing Senator Eastland's "sipping pink tea with Bobby Kennedy." The leaflet also offered a cartoon of Eastland shaking hands with Senator Kennedy. Eastland's support of the Kennedy nominee to the federal bench, Francis X. Morrissey, aroused considerable protests from this Mississippi faction. Speakers for these groups will frequently strike hard at the theme, "We shall never forget Oxford," an allusion, of course, to the civil disturbance at Ole Miss which President Kennedy and then Attorney-General Robert Kennedy had a prominent role in attempting to subdue.

The Association for the Preservation of the White Race is so rickety, splintered and scattered that it is difficult to determine all its officers or the source of its funds or the scope of its membership. One picks up only random names.

For example, Mrs. Ralph Ainsworth, 26, a Jackson schoolteacher, was shot to death by police last June when she was caught in what lawmen said was an effort to dynamite the home of a Jewish businessman. In her purse were membership cards for the Ku Klux Klan and the APWR.

Typical of the APWR activities was the "Operation Locust" launched early in 1966 to buy from merchants who had been boycotted by the NAACP in Fayette. It was reportedly fairly successful, drawing customers from as far as Alabama and Louisiana. Despite such passing successes, the APWR does not have much public acceptance; when the Ole Miss law school invited Senator Robert Kennedy to speak in 19

ficial to bal announced rally at the Student Sen preservation turned it aw

The dissid
by lending same faces
by different a "conserva
County cour executives
tion of C
New Orlea
the Klan.
Mayor R. D.
the group; F
the Mississip
the Rev. A.
College in B
Judge O. H. are respected sent the four
This is impor
the same tim the "dictators braiding "ch tion," Klansm literature thr quasi-approva

Around Jac unanimously any influence allowed as h on somebody
they had neve
one interview
Council and
The National
from the perv
ence, seems t sissippi what state editor o
CIAL APPEAL,
his own thor
sippi politics strong positio clined to agr discount the K

es is reportedly also ehind the Americans
f the White Race in ypical of the activiand Americans for he White Race in ich John Rarick was and the topic, not
d to revolve around Southerners. Sen-
ernor Paul Johnson
eing too moderate.
mailed out a leaf-
r Eastland's "sip-by Kennedy." The artoon of Eastland
Senator Kennedy.
he Kennedy nom-
ch, Francis X. Mor-
rable protests
tion. Speakers for uently strike hard never forget Ox-
ourse, to the civil iss which Presi-
Attorney-General
prominent role in e Preservation of ckety, splintered ifficult to deter-

he source of its
its membership.
om names.
h Ainsworth, 26,
, was shot to when she was
id was an effort
f a Jewish busiere membership
and the APWR.
tivities was the ched early in ants who had
ACP in Fayette.
cessful, drawing
Alabama and sing successes,
much public
Ole Miss law
ert Kennedy to speak in 1966 (it later invited a Klan official to balance the program), the APWR announced that it would stage a protest rally at the university, but the Ole Miss Student Senate voted opposition to the preservationists' visit and successfully turned it away. The vote was 38 to 15.

The dissident groups appear to survive by lending each other members. The same faces show up at rallies sponsored by different groups. Thus when there was a "conservative Rally" on the Rankin County courthouse grounds, present were executives of the APWR, the Association of Christian Conservatives, the New Orleans Citizens' Council, and the Klan. Speakers included Brandon Mayor R. D. Morrow, Jr., who welcomed the group; Fred Ross, former director of the Mississippi Department of Welfare; the Rev. A. C. Everett of Whiteworth College in Brookhaven; and State Circuit Judge O. H. Barnett of Carthage. These are respected names, even if they represent the fourth and fifth rung of politics. This is important to bear in mind, for at the same time these men were alluding to the "dictatorship" in Washington and upbraiding "churches that teach integration," Klansmen were distributing their literature through the crowd with the quasi-approval of the speakers.

Around Jackson, state officials almost unanimously denied that the Klan was of any influence on them, although they allowed as how it might be an influence on somebody else. Most state officials said they had never heard of the APWR. Everyone interviewed defended the Citizens Council and saw it as regaining strength. The National States Rights Party, judging from the pervading ignorance of its existence, seems to have no foothold in Mississippi whatsoever. William B. Street, state editor of the Memphis COMMERCIAL APPEAL, whose staff of stringers and his own thorough knowledge of Mississippi politics puts him in a uniquely strong position to judge, says he is inclined to agree with state officials who discount the Klan's political influence, except in certain pockets, such as around Natchez and in the Southeastern section. He puts the Klan count at 500 for the United Knights and 2,500 for all other Klans; of these 2,500 he believes 90 per cent would be White Knights. Street guesses that the Klan could "scare up," in several senses, about 10,000 votes around the state. There are, of course, innumerable hunting and fishing clubs with a Klan-like perspective.

□ □ □

On August 19, 1966, Robert M. Shelton, imperial wizard of the UKA, showed up in Star City, Arkansas to proclaim that the Klan is "getting in a position in Arkansas when it can use its power and influence to help elect a governor. We've done it in Alabama."

This estimate of their strength was certainly an imperial bit of wizardry, for while Jim Johnson's survival in the Democratic primary was properly hailed as a victory for the stand-pat segregationists, it was not measurably influenced by organized, formal Klansmanship.

Johnson was against so many things that he was bound to strike some responsive chord in many people. A flickering of flame was seen among Citizens' Councilers during his campaign, flaring up highest when Mississippi's ex-Governor Ross Barnett came to speak in the state and proclaim that it was absolutely essential to elect Johnson governor and George Wallace president; on the platform with Barnett was William J. Simmons, head of the Citizens' Council. There was no question but that the Council was working for Johnson, but there was no indication that the Council had the Klan as its ally in this effort.

In day-to-day politics in Arkansas, Klan influence is too small to measure.

□ □ □

The Virginia Klan, like the Klan everywhere, is troubled internally by its hawks and doves—those who feel the Klan is in Mississippi but in the United States. Both were influenced by the hate propaganda which floods the country from California and many other states and both were dedicated to wiping out the "common enemy."

The Kathy Ainsworth who belonged to the Klan undoubtedly died, as her mother said, fighting for her beliefs.

SUSPECT IN 300 ACTS OF TERROR

Laurel, Miss. — Sam H. Bowers, convicted in a case of three killings, charged in a case involving a fourth, and suspected of giving orders that resulted in six other murders, still walks the streets of Laurel.

As imperial wizard of Mississippi's White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, Bowers is suspected by police and the FBI of masterminding almost 300 other acts of violence—shootings, beatings, bombings and burnings.

Convicted last Oct. 20 of a federal civil rights charge growing out of the 1964 lynching of three men in Neshoba County, he has continued to hold Klan meetings while remaining free on appeal. Meanwhile, White Knights terrorism, which, according to court testimony, the imperial wizard must approve, has continued.

U.S. Dist. Court Judge W. Harold Cox allowed Bowers to remain at liberty under an appeal bond of $10,000, but stipulated that he could not leave Jones County (Laurel). A federal judge has discretionary powers to grant or deny an appeal bond in a felony case and may revoke such a bond in face of evidence the defendant is dangerous to the community.

Since Bowers' conviction, at least 20 acts of violence have been laid to the White Knights; he has been charged with kidnapping, and there has been court testimony that he ordered the 1966 death of Hattiesburg civil rights leader Vernon Dahmer, who was killed in a firebombing attack on his home.

The last major violence by the White Knights occurred June 30 in Meridian, Miss., where police surprised two Klan members allegedly trying to dynamite a Jewish businessman's home. In an ensuing gun battle, Mrs. Kathy Ainsworth, a pretty teacher turned terrorist, was killed and her Klan colleague, Thomas Albert Tarrants, III, was injured. Tarrants, firing a submachine gun, critically wounded a policeman and a bystander.

The day after the gun battle, the TIMES has learned, Bowers wrote to one of the Meridian policemen who were watching the house, complaining that police had killed "a Christian, American patriot . . . doing her best to preserve Christian civilization by helping to destroy the body of an animal of Satan's synagogue. . . ."

It was a typical Bowers hate epistle, except that he engaged in untypical self-deprecation ("my witness is damaged by the fact that I am an ignorant, filthy and dishonorable sinner").

In the five-page typewritten letter to officer Tom E. Tucker, Bowers wrote that "as one who has been repeatedly accused of having blood-stained hands," he could sympathize with Tucker "for the horrible experience which you have undergone."

'Principle of Law'

"Mr. Tucker," Bowers wrote, "the principle of law as it has been twisted and abused by the animals in the synagogue of Satan, one of which you were guarding and protecting on the night when young Kathy was killed, and one of your fellow officers was wounded nigh unto death, is not the law of our father; it is the law of Asiatic, cannabalistic slavery."

The law, although moving much too slowly for his potential victims, is steadily weaving a web around the imperial wizard. Along with three other White Knights and a Klan attorney, he is charged with kidnapping in an alleged attempt to force a false statement from a witness in the Dahmer arson-murder case. He also is charged with arson in the case.

In the kidnapping case, one witness testified Bowers became enraged when other Klansmen refused to carry out his order to "eliminate" the victim.

Tirades are not unusual for Bowers. Ever since the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation d he has frequent racial questions to have initiated to the civil righ

when he joined and shortly ther
most notorious $50
Bowers today
in bonds—$20,0 $10,000 in a fe
Neshoba lynchi charge involvin $10,000 in the growing out of
He was tried a mistrial was ported it was ho
1 in favor of another trial or case three Wh been sentenced convictions and guilty to murde
Bowers is fr
old Klan hango
by Devours Ni
Knights bureau
arson defendar
The imperial pounds), with lidded eyes an
to the sides, us dark glasses to getting clear p before he beca
criminal charge
He seems de trials in federa
state court at chewing gum,
face except for seemed to be Bowers, 43, stereotyped, r
many of his he
of a former college almost reader and a writer. He is a

PAGINATION INCORRECT PAGE (s) MISSING

ome. In an ensuing Ainsworth, a pretty
st, was killed and
homas Albert Tar-
. Tarrants, firing a ically wounded a nder.
n battle, the TIMES
rote to one of the ho were watching
g that police had erican patriot . . .
rve Christian civil-estroy the body of nagogue. . . ."
vers hate epistle,
in untypical self-ss is damaged by norant, filthy and

ewritten letter to owers wrote that peatedly accused hands," he could
"for the horrible ave undergone."
Law'
wrote, "the prineen twisted and n the synagogue
u were guarding
ght when young
e of your fellow
igh unto death,
er; it is the law
avery."
ving much too
ctims, is steadily
e imperial wiz-
r White Knights is charged with ttempt to force
witness in the se. He also is case.
one witness tes-
ged when other out his order

l for Bowers.
Court's school desegregation decision of May 17, 1954, he has frequently become enraged over racial questions. But he was not known to have initiated any organized opposition to the civil rights movement until 1963, when he joined a Louisiana-based Klan and shortly thereafter formed the nation's most notorious Klan—the White Knights.

$50,000 in Bonds

Bowers today is under a total of $50,000 in bonds—$20,000 in the kidnapping case, $10,000 in a federal case involving the Neshoba lynchings, $10,000 on an arson charge involving the Dahmer killing and $10,000 in the federal civil rights case growing out of the Dahmer killing.

He was tried on the arson charge, but a mistrial was declared after a jury reported it was hopelessly deadlocked 11 to 1 in favor of a guilty verdict. He faces another trial on the charge. In the same case three White Knights already have been sentenced to life—two on murder convictions and the third on a plea of guilty to murder.

Bowers is frequently seen here at an old Klan hangout, John's Cafe, operated by Devours Nix, 44, head of the White Knights bureau of investigation and an arson defendant in the Dahmer case.

The imperial wizard, slim (6 feet, 165 pounds), with high cheekbones, heavy-lidded eyes and long blond hair combed to the sides, used to slip around wearing dark glasses to prevent investigators from getting clear photographs. But that was before he became so deeply involved in criminal charges. Now he doesn't bother.

He seems devoid of humor. During his trials in federal court at Meridian and in state court at Hattiesburg, he sat quietly chewing gum, a grim expression on his face except for occasional smirks when he seemed to be enjoying some private joke.

Bowers, 43, a bachelor, is hardly the stereotyped, rednecked racist, although many of his henchmen are. The grandson of a former congressman, he attended college almost two years, is a voracious reader and a prolific and quite literate writer. He is a fairly successful businessman and his partner in a coin machine firm is a reserve major who heads the local Army Reserve unit here.

Disowned by his father ("he's not mine anymore"), Bowers is defended by his mother, who told the TIMES, "He's fanatically interested in fighting communism, but isn't everybody?"

Mrs. Bowers, whose husband divorced her 25 years ago after she left him with Sam, then a teen-ager and another son, only 2 years old, declared she was convinced of Sam's innocence, "otherwise I couldn't bear this."

"I know a psychiatrist who would say Sam is a product of a broken home, but he's not," declared Mrs. Bowers, a retired state employee. "He was reared very carefully."

Bowers refused to talk about his troubles. To a reporter who tried to question him, he said, "I don't intend to cooperate with you and you don't have permission to use my name in any way."

Bowers lived an obscure life until he became a Klan chieftain. He was born Aug. 6, 1924, in New Orleans, the son of a salesman from Gulfport whose father, Eaton J. Bowers, a lawyer, served four terms in Congress (1903-1911).

'Brilliant Mind'

Sam Bowers' mother, Evangeline Peyton, the daughter of Lincoln Rigg, a well-to-do planter, says Eaton Bowers "read and talked constantly to Sam and he used to say Sam had the most brilliant mind of any child he had ever seen."

Bowers' himself has boasted of the relationship, although it is little known in Mississippi.

In a 1965 letter to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, copies of which he sent to Mississippi members of Congress, Bowers complained about "harassment," and protested that he was a Christian with an ancestral background who should not have been subjected to "belligerent" acts by the FBI.

"The first president of the first constituted legislative assembly on this continent, the Virginia House of Burgesses, was my direct lineal ancestor," Bowers wrote.

"It was my own privilege to serve as a volunteer in the USN from 1941-45. My grandfather, E. J. Bowers, a former Congressman . . . at whose knee I received a goodly portion of my education, was freely acknowledged by his contemporaries at the bar to be without peer in his grasp of the basic theory of the purpose of our law."

Bowers wrote then that he hoped he could continue to hold the FBI in high regard and that it would "not fall a victim, as so many other governmental agencies have, to the powerful anti-Christ forces which are destroying our country. . . ."

'Animal Regulations'

The FBI has since fallen from grace, as indicated in Bowers' letter to Officer Tucker, in which he said that without the spirit of Christ to sustain it, "our law becomes a set of animal regulations, the delight of bureaucrats and professionals such as Roy Gunn (Meridian police chief) and J. Edgar Hoover, and the glory of the synagogue of Satan Jews."

"Oh, the horror and sheer absurdity of it all," continued Bowers. "Imagine the children of God, WHITE PEOPLE, cheating each other over the 'rights' of a child of the devil! How can this occur? It happens when men such as J. Edgar Hoover and Roy Gunn violate the First Commandment of Almighty God and teach innocent men to trust in them and their law instead of first trusting in the Heavenly Father. . . ."

Mrs. Bowers, who lives alone in a small, tastefully furnished Jackson, Miss., apartment, recalls that as a child Sam was "an inveterate reader and read books far advanced for his age."

"He was wild about Erector sets and anything mechanical," she said.

Although she said she is "as proud of Sam as I can be," she said she was disappointed he went into the coin machine business . . . pinballs, cigaret machines and other vending devices.

"It's beneath him," she said. "I don't know why he got into it. I wanted him to be a lawyer; his father was the first Bowers for generations that was not a lawyer."

Father Is Retired

Sam grew up in New Orleans, the Tampa-Ft. Meyers area of Florida, Gulfport and Jackson. His father changed jobs frequently, working as a salesman, as an agent with the U.S. Border Patrol Service, and then for a railroad and later in defense work. Contacted in an eastern city where he now lives in retirement, he said Sam "is not my son anymore, I disowned him a long time ago and I'm living as anonymously as possible. I wish you wouldn't say where."

Former high school classmates remember young Sam as a bright student who made fairly good grades, but worked well below his capacity. He seldom socialized and did not associate with girls, traits he has retained as an adult, according to long-time acquaintances.

School records at Fortier in New Orleans, which was considered the city's top public high school when he attended there, showed he got excellent grades in history, science and math.

Two former schoolmates recall that he never got into serious trouble, but enjoyed turning on fireplugs and outwitting police who tried to catch him. Said one, "Sam had an old beat-up Model A he was always working on or driving and enjoyed running around turning on fireplugs, then taking off before police had a chance to get him.

"It was just fun, he didn't mean any meanness, but he seemed to have a disregard for the consequences of anything he did. For example, one time he got hold of a railroad switch key and wanted to go change the switches, not to cause a wreck, but just to 'see the engineer's face when the train goes on the wrong track.' "

Parents Divorced

Records pertaining to a divorce decree in New Orleans, granted July 20, 1943, to Sam Bowers, Sr., showed that his wife left him on June 15, 1939, when Sam was 14 and his younger brother (now a college graduate, also living as anonymously as possible and

Sam) was 2
Sam and caught in th dispute. Rec
—after the
vorce—his fa
to New Orle
with his mot
On Dec.
Japanese bo
17 years old,
with his fa
mother's, joi
"He's fana says today. "
ing for a p lousy govern
Sam serve 1945, when as a machini
ing year, ha diploma thr entered Tula
He transf tended the s
the Univers school of e working tow degree. Ther classmate, R cago, who managerial t company if chanical wor
Larson, tal and three ye previous co
lege. New C nois Institute
cago, and W in Lexington,
But neithe
ceived a de moved to L was living, a ment Co.
Larson, n
Army Reserv
nected with investigators

r was the first Bowers was not a lawyer."

s Retired

New Orleans, the rea of Florida, Gulf-
s father changed jobs
as a salesman, as an Border Patrol Service,
oad and later in deed in an eastern city
in retirement, he said anymore, I disowned go and I'm living as ossible. I wish you
"

ol classmates remema bright student who ades, but worked well
He seldom socialized te with girls, traits he adult, according to nces.

t Fortier in New Ornsidered the city's top when he attended
ot excellent grades in math.

olmates recall that he ous trouble, but eneplugs and outwitting catch him. Said one,
at-up Model A he was r driving and enjoyed ing on fireplugs, then olice had a chance to he didn't mean any emed to have a disreuences of anything he he time he got hold of

ey and wanted to go
, not to cause a wreck, engineer's face when
e wrong track.' "

Divorced

g to a divorce decree nted July 20, 1943, to owed that his wife left 39, when Sam was 14
rother (now a college
g as anonymously as possible and having nothing to do with Sam) was 2 years old.

Sam and his brother apparently were caught in the middle of a bitter marital dispute. Records indicate that at one time —after the separation but before the divorce—his father forcibly took his brother to New Orleans, although Sam remained with his mother in Jackson for two years.

On Dec. 17, 1941, 10 days after the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor, Sam, only 17 years old, left Fortier High School and, with his father's consent, but not his mother's, joined the Navy.

"He's fanatically patriotic," his mother says today. "But he thought he was fighting for a pure democracy, not for this lousy government."

Sam served in the Navy until Dec. 7, 1945, when he was honorably discharged as a machinist mate first class. The following year, having secured his high school diploma through an equivalency test, he entered Tulane University in New Orleans.

He transferred after a year and attended the spring and summer sessions at the University of Southern California school of engineering in Los Angeles, working toward a bachelor of engineering degree. There he became friends with a classmate, Robert Harry Larson of Chicago, who later offered to provide the managerial talents for a vending machine company if Bowers would do the mechanical work.

Larson, taller and heavier than Bowers and three years older, had attended four previous colleges—Central YMCA College, New Community College, and Illinois Institute of Technology, all in Chicago, and Washington and Lee University in Lexington, Va.

But neither Bowers nor Larson ever received a degree and after leaving USC moved to Laurel, where Bowers' father was living, and set up the Sambo Amusement Co.

Larson, now a distinguished-looking Army Reserve major, has never been connected with Klan activities and he has told investigators that Bowers never mixed such activities with business. For many years Larson and Bowers lived in one of two small frame buildings which housed the firm's equipment and records. Larson now lives in one of the buildings and Bowers lives in the other across an alley.

Although Larson has remained a friend and business partner with Bowers, their relationship has been strained at times, according to acquaintances. One said, "I've known them to go for months without ever speaking."

Even in a city this small (population 27,000) Bowers early in his career here remained a nonentity except in places where he serviced coin machines. His only trouble with the law, before his Klan activities, came in February, 1955, when both he and Larson were arrested for illegal possession of liquor. Bowers pleaded guilty and was fined $100; Larson pleaded innocent and the charge was dropped.

It was a strange charge for Bowers, who neither drinks nor smokes. "He always said he didn't want to be a slave to any habit," his mother says.

Swastika Emblems

But people who knew Bowers well say he had some rather strange habits—like wearing swastika emblems on his arm or clicking his heels in front of his old dog, stiffly throwing a Nazi salute and exclaiming, "Heil Hitler."

"And he's always been a fanatic on guns and explosives," says a former friend. "He likes to talk about how to make explosives and he'll talk to you about it for hours if you'll listen. He's got a nasty temper and when he gets mad he stalks up and down, raising his voice and clenching his fist. I've never seen anybody try to head him off, they just back off."

When President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in 1963, according to this source, Bowers "just thought it was wonderful—he went into happy, crazy acting."

Bowers' mother, who also says she is an inveterate reader, shares her son's great anxiety about an internal Communist menace. She told a reporter, "The Communists have infiltrated the FBI—I know that—I can read—Sam didn't have to tell me that."

Mrs. Bowers loathes the FBI and believes it is trying to frame her son.

"Bobby Kennedy sent 250 FBI hoods—you know the Kennedys control the underworld—to Mississippi and Alabama to deny us our rights," she said, without explaining further. She added, "No, I didn't get that from Sam, I read it."

Last December a constable in Collins charged Bowers and Thomas Tarrants with possessing an illegal weapon (submachine gun) which he found after stopping them on a reckless driving charge. "The FBI was just using reckless driving as an excuse to plant that evidence (the weapon) on them," Mrs. Bowers says. "Sam is fanatical about reckless driving and he wouldn't have been in a car with anyone driving recklessly." A jury acquitted Bowers of the weapons charge.

At one point in the two-hour interview Mrs. Bowers cautioned the reporter, "Don't use my address now. Sam's fanatical about trying to protect me from all this—it's vicious."

Occasionally she strayed from the subject, reminiscing about the old days when there was no civil rights movement. "All I want is if it could be just like it was. Our niggers had all they wanted. They were happy. We took care of 'em. Now the common people and white trash from the North have come down here and got our niggers all dissatisfied. The Yankees have just brainwashed 'em."

"I've lived too long," she said, "I never thought I'd have to face anything like this. I was rather carefully raised, too."

Preparatory School

Mrs. Bowers said she had a governess until she went off to preparatory school in New York—Miss Finch's Finishing School for Girls, which no longer exists.

Several times she volunteered that her son was not the product of a broken home and once she said, "Sam was not affected or frustrated over a divorce and he never had a traumatic experience in his life, to my knowledge."

At the same time, she insisted he is innocent of any violence. "You couldn't pay him to bomb a church," she said.

She said his knowledge of history "is what makes him so very interested in fighting this thing—he knows how a race of people, like the Greeks for example, were mongrelized by a darker race of people. He has read everything he can get his hands on about communism and how it works, but he wouldn't kill anybody. He says that everything that's happening is all predicted in the Bible."

Mrs. Bowers said she and her son both love Negroes "who know their place."

Church Members

Mrs. Bowers said she and Sam are devout Christians. "I'm an Episcopalian and Sam's a Methodist like his father," she said, although for many years now Bowers has been a member of Laurel's small Hillcrest Baptist Church.

"When I think of the way people are persecuting Sam," Mrs. Bowers said, "why I think of the Blessed Mother and how she stood everything—understand now, I'm not likening Sam to Jesus Christ—but I think of how a mother stands such things and I know it's just God's grace." For the first time she wept, dabbing at her eyes with a tissue.

Mrs. Bowers was disturbed to learn that her son had written a letter to officer Tucker defending Mrs. Ainsworth and Tarrants, and said, "I don't know what good he thinks bombing a poor Jew's home will do, but I don't know what's in his mind.

"I'm his mother but I'm not responsible," she finally said, "Why does my background have a bearing on what he did? I don't see why you even have to write about Sam."

With all of her son's troubles, Mrs. Bowers has one consolation.

"I've never seen Sam so serene," she said. "He says he's happy. He says if the Father wants him to go to the federal pen, then that's where he'll go."

REACTION

Laurel, M
the White K
early 1964,
lowers, "If opponents they are goo eventually lo of the enem

Today Bo
"enemies" ki intimidated, gogues and

There is sti
Knights—hur and barbecu as recently as drew 3,000 p
the legal de Klansmen.

But the sup
Mississippians
men are bad.
lic reaction re
rorism, especi sippians—a p were critically with two Kla
June 30.

At its peak order number but federal so are fewer tha hard-core mer

Continuing increasing nur vestigations h criminal charg and have frigh
resigning.

In all, 36 W
rested in case
total of seven imperial wizard mony, must a has been convi violation in a ca
and faces a sec
in a mistrial be charge of arso
fourth.

er had a traumatic experience in to my knowledge."
e same time, she insisted he is inof any violence. "You couldn't pay bomb a church," she said.
aid his knowledge of history "is akes him so very interested in this thing—he knows how a race le, like the Greeks for example, ongrelized by a darker race of
He has read everything he can ands on about communism and orks, but he wouldn't kill any-says that everything that's hap-all predicted in the Bible."
owers said she and her son both roes "who know their place."

Church Members

owers said she and Sam are de-stians. "I'm an Episcopalian and Methodist like his father," she ugh for many years now Bowers a member of Laurel's small Hill-st Church.
I think of the way people are g Sam," Mrs. Bowers said, "why the Blessed Mother and how everything—understand now, ening Sam to Jesus Christ—but ow a mother stands such things it's just God's grace." For the he wept, dabbing at her eyes e.
ers was disturbed to learn that d written a letter to officer nding Mrs. Ainsworth and Tar-id, "I don't know what good mbing a poor Jew's home will n't know what's in his mind.
mother but I'm not responfinally said, "Why does my have a bearing on what he see why you even have to Sam."
f her son's troubles, Mrs.
ne consolation.
seen Sam so serene," she he's happy. He says if the im to go to the federal pen, ere he'll go."

REACTION AGAINST TERRORISM

Laurel, Miss.—Shortly after he formed the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in early 1964, Sam H. Bowers told his followers, "If we permit our enemies and opponents to convince the public that they are good, and we are bad, we will eventually lose, regardless of how many of the enemy that we kill."

Today Bowers can count at least 10 "enemies" killed, many others injured and intimidated, and scores of churches, synagogues and homes burned or bombed.

There is still some support for the White Knights—hundreds still attend fish fry and barbecue rallies in their behalf and as recently as last year, a rally near Laurel drew 3,000 persons and raised $1,000 for the legal defense of Bowers and other Klansmen.

But the support has dwindled and most Mississippians are convinced the Klansmen are bad. There has been strong public reaction recently against the Klan's terrorism, especially since two white Mississippians—a policeman and a bystander—were critically wounded in a gun battle with two Klan members at Meridian on June 30.

At its peak in 1964-65, Bowers' hooded order numbered 5,000 to 6,000 members, but federal sources say that today there are fewer than 500, including about 50 hard-core members.

Continuing FBI investigations and an increasing number of state and local investigations have resulted in mounting criminal charges against White Knights and have frightened many members into resigning.

In all, 36 White Knights have been arrested in cases of terrorism involving a total of seven murders. Bowers, who as imperial wizard, according to court testimony, must approve all "eliminations," has been convicted of a federal civil rights violation in a case involving three murders and faces a second trial—the first ended in a mistrial because of a hung jury—on a charge of arson in connection with a fourth.

The FBI and police have information that Bowers' Klansmen have killed at least three persons in cases in which no charges have been filed.

Much of the violence occurred in 1964 and 1965 when racists were incensed over the presence in Mississippi of large numbers of civil rights workers. Terrorist acts broke out sporadically in 1966 and 1967.

Some police sources felt that the back of the White Knights was broken Oct. 20, 1967, when an all-white federal jury at Meridian found Bowers and six other Klansmen guilty of conspiring to violate the civil rights of three young men who were lynched in Neshoba County. The sources were wrong.

U.S. Judge W. Harold Cox gave Bowers and Neshoba County Chief Deputy Sheriff Cecil Price maximum 10-year sentences and sentenced the others who were convicted to terms ranging from 3 to 6 years. He released all of them on appeal bonds.

Meetings Continue

Bowers, confined to Jones County (Laurel) under terms of the $10,000 appeal bond, has continued to hold Klan meetings. White Knights terrorism also has continued, including the bombing of a synagogue and a rabbi's home in Jackson, the bombing of a synagogue and fire-bombing or burning attacks on 10 churches and houses in the Meridian area.

The White Knights have been heavily armed and according to federal records, at least one of the Klan's members—Louis Anthony DiSalvo, 41, a barbershop operator at Waveland—still holds a federal firearms license as a gun dealer. He is known to state investigators and the FBI as a violent-talking racist who speaks at Klan rallies and spreads hate literature.

After Bowers' arrest on the arson charge, FBI agents raided his coin-machine firm here and confiscated eight weapons, including at least one submachine gun, several revolvers, six canisters of .30-caliber ammunition and a case and several bandoliers of other ammunition.

A large quantity of ammunition and more than two dozen other weapons were seized at the homes of other Klansmen arrested in the case.

Women Targets

Women and children have been the targets of some Klan attacks, including two of the more recent ones. Last May 2, nightriders sprayed 25 submachine gun bullets into the home of Mrs. Flossie Lindsey, a Negro, in the Sand Hill community of Rankin County, injuring her 6-year-old grandchild.

Last June 6, Mrs. Lillie Byrd, a Negro widow, and her brother, Nelson McIntosh, were injured slightly when a night dynamiting wrecked their house.

Investigators have linked the White Knights to both cases, but no arrests have been made.

Since Bowers organized the Klansmen, the FBI and police have traced about 300 violent acts to them. The White Knights, who consider themselves "Christian soldiers" and mix bullets with Bibles and prayer meetings with military drills, are suspected of burning 75 churches.

Joined in 1963

Bowers, a long-time fanatical racist, became interested in the Klan in 1963 and joined the Original Knights of the Ku Klux Klan of Louisiana after it spread across the Mississippi River and established a klavern in Natchez.

A persuasive talker ("he can get these people to do damn near anything," one investigator said), he convinced a number of the Original Knights in early 1964 that they would join a highly secret Klan he was forming that would use "physical force" against the civil rights movement.

He was an instant hit with the people who generally make up the rank and file of the Klans—school dropouts, unskilled and semiskilled laborers and lower-income whites who manifest economic as well as social fears about Negroes and the civil rights movement.

They could look up to him but identify with him, too. He was better educated (almost two years of college) and used big words and fancy phrases, but he shared their views and translated them into action.

Justifies Violence

He even justified for them the use of violence in behalf of "Christianity."

"As Christians," he wrote in a lengthy "executive lecture" on March 1, 1964, "we are disposed to kindness, generosity, affection and humility in our dealings with others. As militants, we are disposed to the use of physical force against our enemies. How can we reconcile these two apparently contradictory philosophies, and at the same time, make sure that we do not violate the divine law by our actions, which may be held against us when we face that last court on the Day of Judgment?

"The answer, of course, is to purge malice, bitterness and vengeance from our hearts. To pray each day for Divine Guidance, that our feet shall remain on the Correct Path, and that all of our acts be God's will working through our humble selves here upon this earth."

That was good enough for the Klansmen. Besides, their ranks came to include a number of persons who commanded some respect in their communities.

One was a highly regarded fifth-grade schoolteacher, Mrs. Kathy Ainsworth, who was killed in the Meridian gun battle, and another was a young businessman and former Laurel Jaycee leader who was charged with murder in one of the Klan killings.

A number of law enforcement officers (several in Laurel), jack-leg preachers and rag-tag attorneys and other professional or semiprofessional persons also joined.

Laurel was the logical place for a Klan headquarters—and not just because Bowers lived there. Its population (27,000) is 35 per cent Negro and many of its whites became incensed when the city's largest industry, the Masonite Corp., began trying to implement equal employment opportunities as required by government contracts.

Only a small village before World War I, Laurel, situated in an area lush with long-leaf pin small city a wood-produc

home of Will northern capi
Corp.

C

The public
Bowers and what has app arrests and t been highly s ably has carrie

"Ours is a reads one of
"We work be harass the ene have little or the daytime .
the Communi agitators want battles in the declare martia

The Laurel confined its co
to arrest and by the Klan M

Editor J. W. has never can but has stood

R

West said a newspaper tha that they did i thing to them
anything for th

"Anything w be strictly from said. "We don'

Laurel reside about the Whi
"We don't talk here because might be talkin
all the member

In Bowers' M
cautioned the K
proaching influ
the state in the not be easy to

"We are all red their views and translated them action.

Justifies Violence

e even justified for them the use of nce in behalf of "Christianity."
s Christians," he wrote in a lengthy utive lecture" on March 1, 1964, re disposed to kindness, generosity, ion and humility in our dealings thers. As militants, we are disposed use of physical force against our
s. How can we reconcile these two ntly contradictory philosophies, the same time, make sure that not violate the divine law by our which may be held against us e face that last court on the Day nent?

answer, of course, is to purge bitterness and vengeance from
s. To pray each day for Divine that our feet shall remain on t Path, and that all of our acts vill working through our hum-here upon this earth."

good enough for the Klanss, their ranks came to include of persons who commanded t in their communities.
a highly regarded fifth-grade
, Mrs. Kathy Ainsworth,
ed in the Meridian gun bat-er was a young businessman urel Jaycee leader who was murder in one of the Klan

f law enforcement officers el), jack-leg preachers and s and other professional nal persons also joined.
e logical place for a Klan d not just because
e. Its population (27,000)
Negro and many of its censed when the city's he Masonite Corp., be-lement equal employs as required by gov-

ge before World War
in an area lush with long-leaf pines, developed as a rugged, small city around sawmills and other wood-products industries. It was the home of William H. Mason, who utilized northern capital to develop the Masonite Corp.

Group Secretive

The public here knows little about Bowers and the White Knights beyond what has appeared in news accounts of arrests and trials. The organization has been highly secretive and almost invariably has carried out its terrorism at night.

"Ours is a nocturnal organization," reads one of Bowers' Klan documents. "We work best at night . . . we must harass the enemy at night and, in general, have little or nothing to do with him in the daytime . . . We must remember that the Communists who are directing the agitators want us to engage in pitched battles in the streets so that they can declare martial law."

The Laurel LEADER-CALL, which has confined its coverage of the White Knights to arrest and court cases, was bombed by the Klan May 20, 1964.

Editor J. W. West says that the paper has never campaigned against the Klan but has stood firmly for law and order.

Reason Given

West said after the bombing of the newspaper that "word came back to us that they did it not because we did anything to them but because we didn't do anything for them."

"Anything we write about Bowers will be strictly from the court record," West said. "We don't want to fool with him."

Laurel residents are leery of talking about the White Knights. As one put it, "We don't talk much about them around here because we never know who we might be talking to. You don't know who all the members are."

In Bowers' March 1, 1964, lecture, he cautioned the Klansmen that with the approaching influx of civil rights workers to the state in the summer, Klan goals would not be easy to achieve.

"We are all of us in a highly irritated and excited state of mind at this time," he wrote. "The Communists in the governmental administration and their fellow conspirators in the NAACP are deliberately trying to goad us into making mistakes, which they can exploit to their political advantage.

"To counteract this, we must keep our heads and get down to work. We must not make the classic military blunder of permitting the enemy to choose the battleground and set the conditions of the battle. We must design our own attack program, and stick to it without distraction!"

Perhaps one reason the Klansmen were in such an excited state of mind was that on the night before the White Knights had claimed their first victim—Clifton Walker, 37, Negro, of Woodville, who was killed with a shotgun at close range because of an alleged sexual involvement with a white woman. No arrests had been made in that case.

On May 2, two more Negroes were killed, but their bodies were not found until July 12, 1964. Henry Hezekiah Dee, 19, and Charley Eddie Moore, 20, an Alcorn A&M College student, were tied to a tree and whipped by hooded White Knights. Part of one body, tied to a railroad tie, and part of another, tied to a motor block, were found in the Old River south of Tallulah.

During the beatings, according to a witness, the Klansmen tried to force Dee and Moore to admit they were Black Muslims. They were not.

Two members of the White Knights were arrested in the case on a warrant sworn out by the local district attorney, but the case has never been prosecuted, apparently because of insufficient evidence.

The most infamous killings occurred June 21, 1964, when three civil rights workers—Michael Schwerner, 23, and Andrew Goodman, 20, both of New York, and James Chaney, 21, a Meridian Negro —were shot to death by a group of White Knights in a conspiracy aided by several members who were law enforcement officers.

The bodies of the victims, buried in an earthen dam, were recovered 44 days later after an exhaustive FBI investigation.

State charges were never brought in the case, but a federal grand jury indicted Bowers, Neshoba Sheriff Lawrence Rainey, Chief Deputy Price, and 15 other White Knights on charges of violating the victims' civil rights.

Rainey and seven other defendants were acquitted; Bowers, Price and five others were convicted and mistrials were declared in the cases of the Rev. Edgar Ray (Preacher) Killen, E. G. (Hop) Barnette, then Neshoba's Democratic nominee for sheriff, and Jerry Sharpe, 23, Meridian pulpwood hauler.

Judge Cox said new trials would be held for Killen, Barnette and Sharpe, but so far they have not been scheduled.

The next murder victim was Earl Hodges, 47, a white mechanic at Eddiston, who was stripped, tied to a sawhorse and beaten from head to toe with a leather strap with tacks in it.

He was dumped out of a car near his father's house and died shortly afterwards.

Hodges had associated with members of the White Knights, who reportedly beat him because he refused to go with them on a mission to beat a white man the Klan believed was having an affair with a Negro maid. No arrests have been made.

Murder Cases

Other cases of murder include:

Jan. 10, 1966—Vernon Dahmer, 58, Hattiesburg leader of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, killed when two carloads of White Knights made a shooting, firebomb attack on his house, destroying it and sending his wife and three children fleeing into the night. A 10-year-old daughter suffered burns. Five Klansmen were charged with murder and arson, and Bowers and four others were charged only with arson. Three Klansmen already have been given life sentences—two on being convicted and the third on pleading guilty. Bowers and 12 White Knights also were indicted by a federal grand jury for violating Dahmer's civil rights but have not been tried.

June 12, 1966—Ben Chester White, 65, Negro, shot many times with a rifle and a shotgun. Three White Knights were charged with murder in the case, and one confessed and turned state's evidence. An all-white jury acquitted one of them; the other two, including the one who confessed, have not been tried.

Feb. 27, 1967—Wharlast Jackson, NAACP leader at Natchez, killed by a bomb that shattered his car. A year and a half earlier, Natchez NAACP president George Metcalfe was injured critically in a similar case, but he has recovered. There have been no arrests in either case.

There have been other cases where Negroes disappeared and foul play by the White Knights was suspected but never proved. One case, for example, involves a Negro motel employe who made advances to a white telephone switchboard operator in 1964 and has not been heard from since.

And there have been vicious beatings where death did not occur. One involved Otis Matthews, 45, white, a native of Laurel and financial secretary of the International Woodworkers of America (AFL-CIO) local here, who was assaulted because the Klan believed he was promoting integration at the Masonite plant. Eight hooded White Knights beat him with a "black annie"—a leather strap four feet long, one-fourth of an inch thick and four inches wide with small holes in it and a wooden handle.

Recent Cases

There have been other cases of atrocities, some of which have occurred in recent weeks. And some Mississippians who are not directly involved in Klan activities continue to wink at the violence.

The White Knights raise funds through front organizations, such as the Americans for the Preservation of the White Race, whose leader in Jackson is W. T state highway employe.

Many Mississippians who cann the policies of the White Knigh mind attending barbecues or to win support for segregation i in the name of the White Knig attend such rallies not knowing goes to the Klan, but others w well aware of it.

And more powerful organiz have respectable community in as the Citizens' Council, direct ness, industrial and profession continue to promote segrega political leaders and some also give a strident voice to n segregation policies.

All this perpetuates a clim Klansmen feel they have ma

Situation Change

But the picture is chan some leading Mississippia sociated themselves from Council. And political lead ning to speak out.

Gov. John Bell Willia segregationist who has a who has associated wit visited Meridian after the sentences—two on the third on plead-

d 12 White Knights
by a federal grand ahmer's civil rights
ied.
n Chester White, 65,
mes with a rifle and White Knights were in the case, and one
ed state's evidence.
quitted one of them;
ing the one who conn tried.
Wharlast Jackson,
Natchez, killed by a his car. A year and ez NAACP president
s injured critically in has recovered. There
s in either case.
other cases where
d and foul play by the suspected but never for example, involves ployee who made ad-
elephone switchboard
d has not been heard

been vicious beatings
t occur. One involved
5, white, a native of al secretary of the Inworkers of America
ere, who was assaulted elieved he was promotthe Masonite plant.
hite Knights beat him
e"—a leather strap four urth of an inch thick
ide with small holes in handle.

ent Cases en other cases of atrowhich have occurred in nd some Mississippians
ctly involved in Klan ac-
o wink at the violence.
ghts raise funds through s, such as the Americans
ion of the White Race, whose leader in Jackson is W. T. Pike, a state highway employe.

Many Mississippians who cannot accept the policies of the White Knights do not mind attending barbecues or fish fries to win support for segregation if it is not in the name of the White Knights. Some attend such rallies not knowing the money goes to the Klan, but others who go are well aware of it.

And more powerful organizations that have respectable community images, such as the Citizens' Council, directed by business, industrial and professional people—continue to promote segregation. Some political leaders and some newspapers also give a strident voice to never-say-die segregation policies.

All this perpetuates a climate in which Klansmen feel they have many allies.

Situation Changes

But the picture is changing. Already some leading Mississippians have dissociated themselves from the Citizens' Council. And political leaders are beginning to speak out.

Gov. John Bell Williams, a staunch segregationist who has a staff member who has associated with the APWR, visited Meridian after the bombing of the synagogue there and announced that an intensive state investigation would be conducted. After the June 30 battle at Meridian between two Klan members and police, Williams issued a statement commending the police action and declaring that law and order would be upheld in the state.

The FBI, which infiltrated the White Knights with informants long ago, has brought steady and increasing pressure on the terrorists.

However, Bowers' "invisible empire," as the Klan calls itself, did not really begin to crumble until Mississippi juries began convicting some of them and local and state police joined the FBI in a concerted effort to solve Klan crimes.

Until recently, few Mississippi newspapers would speak out against the White Knights. Although they have yet to tell the extent of the White Knights' activities, some papers have begun to campaign against terrorism.

Bowers has expressed concern in several of his secret Klan documents that the White Knights "must always keep the public on our side."

"As long as they are on our side," one document reads, "we can just about do anything to our enemies with impunity."

OF MASONITE

11-1-68

Labor Relations Board Supporting Strike Action

Miss.

The Masonite Corporation of Laurel and striking members of a union in that city have been notified of a National Labor Relations Board decision which supports the action of Masonite in handling employment of certain individuals since the strike.

In a rather sweeping decision, the NLRB upholds the company in refusing to re-hire some of the men involved in the strike, since they were covered under a collective bargaining agreement and violated that agreement.

The strike in April of 1967 found the company resuming production soon, and seven months later, a settlement was reached, terms of which constituted something of a landmark in labor relations in the state. The settlement extended the term of the contract by the amount of time the strike had then been in progress, seven months, and carried the following provisions:

"—Employees now working in the plant cannot be displaced from present job assignments, nor can they be "bumped" by lay - off or recall purposes by anyone not now working at the plant.

"—A preferential hiring list, not including many former employees, will be established for a two-year period. Former employees must indicate to the company their desire to be reemployed by January 15, 1968, then preferential hiring will be given to them as job openings occur.

"—Rehired former employees must complete a 90-day probationary period, then they can exercise a right to use all accumulated seniority to bid on future permanent job openings. They also will receive credit for previous service in determining vacations, holidays, insurance, medical benefits and pension plans.

"—All operations methods, procedures and work assignments currently employed in the plant will be continued permanently at the option of the company, and will not be subject to any grievance, litigation or NLRB charges. (The Company is currently in full production with only 1600 production workers as compared to 2300 production workers under the labor agreement prior to the strike.)

"—All grievances and unfair labor practice charges will be withdrawn, and an out of court settlement was made of a damage suit filed by the company against the union."

It was to escape from some of these provisions that some 688 employees filed their complaints with the NLRB, which has now defined their contentions. The language of the board in a notice addressed to both the company and union said:

"The. . .case charging a violation under Section 8 of the national labor relations act, as amended, has been carefully investigated and considered.

"As a result of the investigation, it appears that further proceedings are not warranted at this time. With respect to the contention that certain individuals were entitled to reinstatement as unfair labor practice stikers or to rehire under the settlement agreement, it is noted that the strike was contended to be an unfair labor practice strike in earlier charges and no proceedings were ever authorized pursuant to that contention.

Consequently, under section 10 (10), the strike cannot now be shown to be an unfair labor practice strike. Since the strike cannot be considered an unfair labor practice strike and the evidence establishes that it occurred in violation of the then effective collective bargaining agreement, the strike was unprotected; therefore, the employer was free to refuse employment to any striking employees.

"Further, the employer's execution of the settlement agreement wherein it agreed to take back some strikers was not considered to be a conconation of the unprotected activity, particularly as the agreement specifically permitted the employer sole discretion in determining the acceptability of strikers who applied for reemployment.

"There is no evidence to support a conclusion that employer's denial of reemployment to some strikers who submitted

"Also there is no evidence that the employer failed to comply with the provisions of the settlement agreement or that its overall conduct was inconsistent with what it agreed to do under the terms of the settlement agreement. Also the settlement agreement was used as a basis for withdrawal requests in earer "CA" and "CB" cases. There is no evidence to support a violation of section 8 (A) (2) of the act. I am, therefore, refusing to issue complaint in this matter."

The formal ruling then set forth the procedures to be followed if the union wants to appeal to the Washington NLRB. Then the ruling picked up the charges brought by the employees in the Wood Workers union, which were denied by the Board ruling handed down in New Orleans.

Union enjoined in Masonite strike

11-18-68 Labor - Miss. DD-T

JACKSON (UPI)--The Mississippi Supreme Court today made permanent an injunction restraining members of Local 5-443 of the International Woodworkers of America from striking against the Masonite Corp. of Laurel.

The court's action came several months after a violent walkout at the huge hardboard manufacturing plant had been settled. However, Masonite officials earlier had said they would conclude all legal action against the local, including a multi-million dollar damage suit filed in U. S. District Court.

The strike was called by the union April 21, 1967, and was followed by picketing and attacks against supervisory personnel entering and leaving the plant. Several bombings and attempted bombings and nightrider attacks linked to the strike followed, climaxed when a security guard was shot to death.

Masonite filed a bill for an injunction May 1, 1967, and a temporary injuction was granted by the state Supreme Court. Later, the union and its officers were found guilty of civil contempt for violating the temporary injunction.

The chancery court of the Second Judicial District of Jones County refused to make the injunction permanent and Masonite appealed to the state Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court, in an unanimous decision, held that the lower court erred in dismissing the temporary injunction and made the injunction permanent but limited to the term of the collective bargaining agreement. The collective bargaining contract was executived March 3, 1967, and contained a no-strike clause.

The court also reversed and remanded for a new trial a suit brought by Mrs. Clarice Howell of Lucedale against a supermarket where she slipped on a banana peel and fell.

The George County Circuit Court had granted a directed verdict against Mrs. Howell, and she appealed on grounds a jury question was raised by uncontradicted testimony regarding remarks of a supermarket employee. The employee said that he might have dropped the banana earlier that day.

The Supreme Court held that this testimony was enough to carry the case to the jury. "The jury could have concluded from this testimony that the employee of the store was negligent in the performance of his duties, and that the banana had been there since early morning as a result thereof."

Labor - Miss

Judge Declares Settlement Between Masonite, Union Valid

3-7-69 JDN

LAUREL, Miss. (AP)— Officials of the Masonite Corp. of Laurel say U.S. Dist. Judge Dan Russell has upheld the trusteeship of a local union by the International Woodworkers of America and has declared a strike settlement between the building materials corporation and the union valid.

The ruling came on an August 1968 complaint field by officials of IWA Local 5-443 asking an injunction against the trusteeship set up by the parent organization and requesting that the strike settlement be declared valid.

J. D. Jolly, Granville Sellers, Herbert Ishee and John A. West filed the action against trustee Walter Forman, the IWA and Masonite. The suit maintained the establishment of the trusteeship was contrary to legal procedure and was consummated without adequate notice.

Russell noted in his ruling, "The court finds that throughout the more than seven months work stoppage, illegal as found by every court and administrative body who heard the issue, J. D. Jolly and the other local officers were advised repeatedly through written and oral communications from the international officers that the strike must end.

"In all the communications and hearings occurring prior to the appointment of a trustee, there was no literal compliance with the international constitutional procedure for establishing a trusteeship, as plaintiffs contend there was more than sufficient compliance with both the constitution and statues thereafter."

Russell also stated authorities were in agreement that bargaining contracts were entered into in good faith by the local and the strike settlement agreement was binding and valid.

UNFAIR? 5/25/68

Masonite Dispute Off Again

Labor - Miss.

JDN

LAUREL, Miss. (AP) -- About 300 former employes of the Masonite Corp. plant here have filed a complaint with the National Labor Relations Board, charging that the company used unfair labor practices.

George Maxey, an attorney for the men, said more names will be added later. Masonite has declined comment but a spokesman said the company will answer the charges.

The dispute arose after the end of a seven-month strike which ended last December. The International Woodworkers of America Union took over control of the striking local union and worked out an agreement stipulating that striking employes could apply for rehiring but the company would make the decision on whom to rehire.

The charges filed with the NLRB allege that the unfair labor practices have been employed in rehiring procedures since the end of the strike.

The bitter strike resulted in the death of a special plant guard who was shot from ambush. Several non-striking workers were beaten, and the homes of some non-strikers were fired on.

AMERICAN LITTLE

SAT. MARCH 8 1969

the "law" and the workingman.

The Masonite workers have had their day in court. They've gotten what justice is available to working men and women in the U.S. Court in Mississippi.

None.

The U.S. District Court of Mississippi's Southern District handed down the opinion March 4. Judge Dan M. Russell signed the opinion. don't know know who wrote it -- tha is , we have no proof who wrote it. It reads as though Masonite's advertising agency was the author. But, whoever wrote it, with Dan Russell' signature on it, it becomes the law As such , it is enforceable with al the might of the United States Govt

The opinion stinks, on every page, with hatred and prejudice against working people. For example, w referring to papers filed by the Masonite workers, the opinion says the papers were "not filed until.. When talking about papers filed by the International and by Masonite, it merely says the papers were "filed". This seems to mean there was something wrong with the filin of the workers" papers. All those papers were filed on time and properly.

The opinion refers to material which have never existed. For exam the opinion says the International filed "minutes of all IWA executive board meetings from November 28th. 1967 to November 12th, 1968." Thats an outright lie. The International never filed minutes of the November 28th meeting. How could they? None were taken.

The opinion ignores the meaning of the federal labor law as it is supposed to be interpreted. For example, the opinion cites Sec. 464 (c) of the U.S. Code which states that "...a trusteeship established by a labor organization in conformity with the procedural requirements of its constitution and bylaws and authorized or ratified after a fair hearing..."(our emphasis). Any definition of the term "fair hearing" must include written charges an opportunity for the accused to to cross-examine witnesses presented against him, and to present witnesses in his own behalf. Everyone connected with the case knows that such a hearing was never held, either before or after the trusteeship.

(continued over page)

The opinion wrings its hands and moans and wails about the violence connected with the strike. It winds up the lurid account with this sentence: "The violence reached its high point when a young unarmed plant security guard was shot and killed". Now how about that? Don't you get a picture of an apple-cheeked youth in the prime of his young life cut down by assassins. The opinion does not mention that the dead man was a Wackenhut gun thug hired by Masonite to intimidate the strikers. It doesen't mention that his death happened months after anything else which might even remotely resemble violence had occurred in connection with the strike. And last but not least, it fails to say that there is considerable doubt about just who was behind the shooting of the guard.

We could go on and on with examples like these; examples of the prejudice and ill-will against working people that show up thru the opinion. But what's the use? We all now know for sure what we've suspected all along. The courts don't work for working people. If working people want justice, they're going to have to take it. They're going to have to quit just asking for it -- they're going to have to just flat out take it.

The taking begins next June 3 when the city of Laurel elects a new administration. Let's make sure its a workingman's and workingwoman's government, and we'll see how Masonite likes taxation from the workingman's point of view. That's where it starts. Fro there it goes to the county and t the neighboring counties and, finally, to the state. It'll take some time and alot of hard work. But we can won if we want to win. And when we win, it'll be our judges on the federal bench. Then Masonite and all the rest of them who've milked us dry all these years, and then left us to rot - then they can have a taste of our justice.

THE RICH EAT OFF THE BACKS OF THE POOR

- - - - - - - - - -

Russell's opinion is public recor Copies can be had from the Fed courthouse in Hattiesburg (for a price) or from attorney George Strickler, 606, Common Street, New Orleans, Louisiana.

NEXT ISSUE of CHICKEN LITTLE
* The hospital "gift".
* Masonite's prospects, 1969.
* Wage rates and corporation profits.

ANNOUNCEMENT .
Nomination of an independent workingpeople's slate, next Saturday, March 15th, 2pm, at the Hickory Lounge, Waynesboro h

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N.W., ATLANTA 3, GEORGIA

Bob Zellner-New Orleans-August 6, 1969

Englehardt

There are seven GROW staff members-- Bob and Dottie Zellner, Mike Higson, Jack Minnis, Rhoda Norman, Ray Mathews, and Bob Analavage. Zellner is the head of the project.

He was SNCC field secretary from 1961 to about 1966 when he went the way that Black Power decreed. At that time he submitted a proposal to SNCC to organize whites and SNCC approved it but did not have the wherewithall to support it (I take it that they did not have the funds but the priorities were probably also a factor there.) He then went to SCEF with the proposal and came to work with them.

He said when they began he really wasn't in a ~~hurry~~ rush about organizing. He thought it would take a couple of years to get over a half douzen contacts in any one location. Organizing poor whites is really difficult or at least it is very new and uncertain. No one has ever don it on a mass scale in the South so he is working on such a model.

In the area of race, if people were going to change their racism ~~therxxxxxx~~ on the basis of conscience, they would have done it during the past eight years of civil rights activity, but they haven't. The nation really doesn't have any conscience. Racism has to be destroyed on the basis of self interest. This is the kind of situation that existed at Laurel. The whites needed the leadership of the Blacks in the Black community. They also has to have unity in the strike if it was to be successful. Thus the situation of self interest was established.

When they went to Mississippi looking for a place to begin the went into an area of the Delta. The things they saw there are those mentioned in the Patriot article and the GROW brochure. These people needed basic welfare services which the GROW people couldn't provide. You can get tied down doing that kind of thing, even though it is a worthwhile endeavor. Also the client donor relationship is difficult to get rid of onee it is started. In Laurel they never established this type of relationship. These people are not the type that Zellner wants to deal with. They are too concerned with providing themselves with food and clothing for daily needs. He wants to work with the working class who have at least some time and sence of political consciousness. Thus the GROW people left that area. ?

Wah the Union Klan controlled? Zellner says that it definitely wasn't. Most of the board members were anti-Klan but (and I cnn't remember the exact reason for their inability to act) they were somewhat powerless to ___ ?

shift the nature of the Union. The Union was very definitely discriminatory and did have Klan influence involved in it, but Zellner states specifically that it was not Klan controlled.

He says the International Union gave the "sweat-heart" contract and put the Union under trusteeship because they got concerned about the money involved. They were being sued by Masonite and became excited and settled it for that reason. I think there was a 3 Million dollar suit against them which was in the process of being raised to 6 million.

In the election, they were beaten pretty badly. Zellner said that he didn't know the percentage (Jackson people say 2-3%) of the vote that they got. However, they did raise the issues for the first time. They also got experience in raising campaign funds, turning out literature, conducting meetings, etc. He says it was really interesting to watch the local Republican Country Club type talk about the need to give a fair shake to the working men and that the county was controlled by the Chamber of Commerce. The Republicans adopted much of the working men's rhetoric and one of the results of the election was the election of a Rep. mayor. To some extent Zellner thinks the people up there have put the officials on notice and if the Rep. don't come through with some of their promises, they will have trouble next election. He says the people have more influence than they do votes (although I'm not sure exactly what he means by that.) It does seem that Zellner thinks that this was only a beginning but an important beginning in terms of working people having a voice in the government.

He says that the solution of the split between the blacks and whites will be extremely important for an success in the strike of politics. Already there has been an number of changes in terms of the racial ideas of the people. More in this length of time than Zellner had actually expected. However, getting this much make him and the group want to push for more, and there is some danger there. He says some unique things have come about already such as whites and blacks going together to the city government to protest police brutality to blacks. He sees good beginnings here, and to some extent says the city government has been put on notice to come accross with some things or else.

The Committee for Working People's Government is the present steering committee for Laurel. It had its beginning with a five member committee elected or formed when the union was put under trusteeship. I think two of these board me members are black. To form the final Committee 2 more members were added which were women.

This committee started off representing 2,000 families. Now they have support from people not involved in the strike. The group at presnet doesn't have any on-going program and more or less reacts to incidents. They are however, at present writing for and circulating a newspaper and doing some leaflets (I think concerned with the strike.). They also raise money for the suits brought by the union. Approximately 100-150 do this. About 300-400 come to a meeting a month -- meetings are held weekly-- and there is a much larger number whidh helps them out but are working elsewhere and can not come to meetings during the week. There are meetings of the union every two weeks and there is this separate meeting of the group which the committee leads. The committe group is separate from the union and considers it a separate body. One of the reasons that so ~~xxxxx~~ may men work outside of the community is that the plant did not rehire the really strong union men and the International union "let them get away with it." (I don't know what the average weekly attendance at the meetings is.)

The staff goes to weekly meeting of the group, does leg work, looks after the lawyers, etc. However, Zellner says that they did only what they were asked to and do not control the activities. In fact they did not want to push the strike issue to the Fifth Circut Court of Appeals because their [illegible] said that most strikes were won or lost on the basis of the union being strong enough to force the company to give in and in this case the union had been beaten. Nevertheless, the people voted to go ahead with the proceedings and so the GROW people went along.

The staff did push some issues. They had to conduct a number of workshops to get the people to run their own candidate. They had been accustomed to having the politicians come around and go with the one who would promise them the most. The GROW people had to work with them to get them to run a candidate who was a working person. This is what has had to be done in several cases. However, "if all of us dropped out altogether, they would keep on fighting"-- they are much more effective and further along than when the GROW people came in.

GROW operate on the principal of finding situations where organizaning is feasible. The want to find something where the people are stirred up and moving-- where they need something that the staff can offer.

They want somewhere where there are possibilities for community and political education. The need for this stage of development is one of the reasons they like to go with working class people. They want to bring in the poor but they are not a viable group in terms of organizing.

The GROW program also works toward the develpment of local organizers. Zellner says there are just not enough people around who can come in to areas and organize to ever hope to create a South-wide organization. What has to be done is the creation of organizers from among the local people. He says that the people in Laurel are already going out to the wood cutters in Ala. (More latter) and telling them of their experiences.

He thinks its very valid to concentrate on several places and do a complete job there. One of the functions of this work is to create models. There haven't been that many models in the past. The Populist experience and the early labor organizing was of a different type. In those instances there was paternalism on the part of the whites and the understanding that they could pull out whenever they wanted to. This in no longer the case. The white man now needs the black man who has a significant degree of power. Also the whites better realize that the black man won't be fooled again. If he double crosses him this time there will be no next time. Whites are really lucky to have this chance at all.

He sees that he is working to help people and particularly white people and it just works out that the issue of racism is a stumbling block to these people,so get rid of it. The emphasis should be on working with people around their practical and one of these interests is combining with black people. He doesn't care really what a man thinks. He can be a racist or a communist or whatever. It the way he acts that matters to Zellner. As long as he behaves certain ways in crisis situations Zellner will be happy. However, he believes that action changes peoples thoughts and attitudes and in fact not conscience but only action and self interest will work. One of the things that GROW tries to do is to pick a group that needs the organizer and black people. He says that he thinks it is dangerous or at least improper to hide who you are and what interests you have on the issue of race. They tell the people they work with immediately that they are former civil rights workers and will help if they need them. Then the very act of asking for help indicated and creates a change. These are the people that those they are working with hated and vice versa when the people on the GROW staff were working in civil rights. The acceptance is a"pretty big leap."

I asked him about ACT's approach ---- He thinks that you have problems involved when you pick a place rather than an issue. In this instance you have to develop the need for your services and the general rapport. In the case of picking an issue the people already need you and they need the blacks. Thus there is instant rapport of some type and dependence. This immediately starts the change mentioned above. From the issue and the dependence you can broaden out into traditional community organization. He also say how you could go the other way from the community approach to issues. Here, though, you do have to waste time developing the issues. One consideration Zellner seems to have here is that of resources. With such limited ones, you should pick a place where you can maximize you success and impact. This is best done through issue selection. He does state though that he wouldn't go so far as to say that ACT's approach was wrong. Its in some ways just a difference in selection of problems and approaches and the two could be combined to some degree.

He wants to stay at a single location for a long time and work the problems completely out. Stay and create local organizers (straighten their heads out.). The day of the summer project approach is out. He is interested only in people who are in it for the long haul.

He thinks that there has really been "some radical changes" in some of the people's attitudes on race.

Laurel and Alabama with the Alabama Wood Producers Association is were the GROW project will remain for some time. The Assoc, is a group of about 000 pulp wood cutters in Ala., north Fla., and Miss. Right now the work GROW with them is in the planning and "marking time" stage. They have ntacts with the groups In the past the Assoc. has had several work stoppages d they are talking about one for this fall. However, this doesn't seem to what Zeller is talking about. He says the Assoc. has something in the fire th a good bit of potential but he isn't at liberty to discuss it now. GROW will be asked to help in this project.

He says the next big issue and hurdle in Laurel will come when the International on give up its trusteeship. The trusteeship has already woutlived its legal e and the elections are scheduled for September. Right now he can't say the election will come out. Very important in it is the black-white co-operat

If they don't win there won't be a real union in Laurel. It will be a company union. The next issue and hurdle after Sept. will be the county elections next year.

GROW is supposed to be a program with a budget of $60-70,000, but it falls considerably short of that. It gets some support from foundation(s). Most of it is from contributions, some small some large. Zellner goes on speaking tours to raise money for it.

He thinks there may be a revolution in the country involving laborers because the unions officials are so far removed in terms of interest from its membership.

(It seems that Zellner is saying that one of the primary reasons for the conditions of the poor white (Dylan) and the reasons for his powerlessness is racism and its clouding of issues and division of people who need to be together if they are to succeed. Therefore you need to get rid of racism, not because it is onf interest as an issue itself, but because it is in the line of helping people and in the line of their self interest. Some of the difference between the emphasis of Zellner and that of ZCT may be explained by the difference in the density of blacks in the deep South an Durham although Boyte said that Durham was deep South. The greater pragamatism and the geographic approach explain part of it, but the issue selection (I think) within Grow itself is influenced by the desire to change ideas rather than the self interest of poor people. Zellner's civil rights interest would make it natural that he would want to hit the race issue as he organizes--explainable, but not necessarily valid? I think Boyte at least was involved in civil rights activity and also Landerman.) Horwith says that the division on the basis of race is definitely a cause for the powerlessness and condition of the poor. He seemed to be saying that it was one of a number. I'M not sure if this is entirely what he meant, but it would square with his leanings toward ACT and the philosophy of ACT in general. It is at least interesting speculation!))

Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF)
GENERAL OFFICES
3210 WEST BROADWAY, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY 40211 • Area Code 502/778-3348

Sept. 1, 1969

Dear Friend of SCEF,

I know that you'll be interested in reading the enclosed pamphlet about two SCEF organizers who are facing prison for refusing to be drafted into the armed forces.

In their cases--and in many others--the draft has been used as a political weapon to stop their organizing work, when other means failed.

We think the pamphlet will be a useful organizing tool for people everywhere. You can help by distributing it in your area. Please write us if you would like more copies.

SCEF is also starting a petition campaign for amnesty for all political prisoners. If you can collect names in your area, write us for copies of the petition.

Finally, funds are needed to pay for printing the pamphlet and for legal expenses. Make checks payable to SCEF, at the above address.

Thank you.

For peace & justice,

Joe Mulloy

Joe Mulloy

McMATH, LEATHERMAN, WOODS & YOUNGDAHL
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW
711 WEST THIRD STREET
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS 72201

SIDNEY S. McMATH
LELAND F. LEATHERMAN
HENRY WOODS
JAMES E. YOUNGDAHL
JOHN P. SIZEMORE
SILAS H. BREWER, JR.

AREA CODE 501
FRANKLIN 6-3021

September 26, 1969

Mr. Emory Via
Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Dear Emory:

In accordance with our discussion of several days ago, I enclose copies of some of the documents put out by the Southern Conference Educational Fund in connection with the Laurel strike.

Please let me know if you have any further questions.

Sincerely,

James E. Youngdahl

JEY:ghw
Encs.

opeiu105aflcio

CHICKEN LITTLE

Number 5 November 16th

The Big Squeeze

CHICKEN LITTLE IN COURT

The Chicken Littles had their day in court. We'll have ours later. You see, what we asked the court to do was, first to enjoin - that is, to forbid - the Memphis meeting. We explained that eight months after the fact was a bit late for the International Chicken Littles to be holding a hearing to decide whether imposition of the trusteeship was legal. The judge decided that he would let the Chicken Littles have their meeting and that later on he could decide whether or not the meeting was worth anything.

We also asked the judge to give us a summary judgment (to decide the whole case in our favor, enjoining the trusteeship and the sweetheart contract, right now). We explained to the judge that the Chicken Littles had failed to follow the rules of the court in answering our request for the summary judgment.

However, it turned out that the Chicken Littles, both company and International, have now decided that they want summary judgments, too. Masonite filed its request for the summary judgment just two days before the November 12 hearing. Obviously, we did not have time to prepare answers to their legal arguments, as Masonite well knew we would not. Chicken Little's attorney, Youngdahl, told the judge during the hearing that he too would be filing a motion for summary judgment, but that he would have to have some time to get it drawn up.

Then the Masonite and the International Chicken Littles s . they thought it would be more convenient for the judge if he heard arguments on all three of the summary judgments at once. The judge agreed that he thought this would be best. So he said that if his calendar was clear, he would hear these arguments on December 23. If his calendar is not clear for that date, he will hear them shortly thereafter.

The long and the short of it is that we went into court fully prepared to argue our case, and convinced there was a good chance the judge would rule in our favor - that he would order the trusteeship removed and cancel the sweetheart contract. Masonite and the International apparently were not prepared to answer our arguments, and feared that the judge would rule in our favor. So they cooked up this little deal about also asking for summary judgments. What this means is that Masonite and the International gained more time at our expense. Since the judge is the one who decides such things, he decided to delay it over our requests for an immediate hearing. Our attorney said if he could present the Local's case there would be no need for any more time.

We remain as convinced as ever that the law is on our side and that we will win, if the Chicken Littles will ever stop running and turn around to try fighting fair for a change. We suppose that eventually the court will force them to do this. Meanwhile they'll run as far and as fast as they can. The one thing they fear most is a fair fight on the issues.

BARBECUE

We are still planning the barbecue. Some details are yet to be worked out. The date will be announced soon.

MEMPHIS MEETING

The only action the International's Executive Board took was to continue the trusteeship. Apparently our actions in court prevented them from doing anything further that would be detrimental to our cause. The meeting was boycotted entirely by our people. Maybe our people were not impressed by the International's claims to insure "democratic procedures" eleven months after they trusteed us. With friends like this, who needs enemies????

ANOTHER LOOK AT CHICKEN LITTLE

The chicken littles have been yelping. Everybody knows that Now they're going to have to do more than yelp. They're going to have to do some straight talking. It'll be a new experience for them.

Our lawyers have required that the Union chicken littles answer the question: just when and where, and by whose authority, they negotiated the sweetheart agreement. The lawyers have required that the Company chicken littles answer the same questions.

The lawyers have also required that the Union chicken littles explain just how they were able to impose a valid trusteeship without following any of the procedures required by the International Constitution. This is a little different from the questions the chicken littles have had to answer before. This time they have to tell the truth or face perjury charges.

When we finish with the chicken littles they may have no feathers left. You see, we hear thru the grapevine that the International is going ahead with the November 12 meeting in Memphis. There's a Federal Court hearing in Biloxi on November 12 to determine whether the November 12 meeting can be held. The Union chicken littles seem suddenly to have lost their respect for Federal Courts. SHAME, SHAME, on chicken littles.

US and THEM

The Company chicken littles have just issued a new financial report. It makes interesting reading. It says how they have made $8.5 million in take-home pay (profits to them) in the 12 months ending Aug. 31, 1968. That's a cool $4½ million more than they bled out of us in the same period ending Aug. 31, 1967. Who benefits? Well, mostly the chicken littles and all of chicken littles' friends. They divide up the profits. Some of it goes to the shareholders.

Now it shouldn't surprise us that the top chickens (they call themselves directors) are among the biggest shareholders. If you take the 12 top chickens together, they stand to make $1 million in dividends this year from their shares (in Masonite)

President and chairman, Mr. John Coates, will make $140,000 this year from dividends on his stock. That's in addition to the $110,000 salary he draws. Mr. Coates is a rich man. If he sold his shares tomorrow he'd get $3.4 million. That's a whole lot of Cadillacs and fine houses and all. And this is not all. When he comes to retire Mr. Coates will draw $25,000 a year.

So when we come to draw our dimes and cents, keep this in mind - that the profits chicken littles make is through our toil and sweat. That's why they're so fat.

It's a good enough reason for feathering them.

THE SKY IS FALLING ON CHICKEN LITTLE

The yelping is about to start!

We're told that Masonite is preparing to begin a smear campaign against the New Orleans people, as we predicted last week.

We don't know just how the smear campaign will be handled, but we doubt that Masonite's hand will show. Of course, we'll know the hand is there.

The New Orleans people have never made a secret of their background. They were involved with SNCC in the Civil Rights Movement for years.

Bob Zellner, Jack Minnis, Mike Higson, Bob Analavage and the rest of them have been working for years to try to help black men in the South gather the strength to stand shoulder to shoulder with their white brothers in the general struggle of working men against companies like Masonite.

They have all been called communists, anarchists, reds, and trouble-makers. They've been called this by the FBI, the Justice Department, Senator Eastland, House Committee on Un-American Activities whose main purpose is to prevent unity among working men against management.

They work for SCEF whose director did a year in the federal penitentiary because he refused to tell the House Committee on Un-American Activities whether or not he was a member of the communist party. He told the committee that under the 1st Amendment to the U. S. Constitution, a man's political beliefs are his own business and neither HUAC nor anybody else has the legal right to force him to reveal those beliefs.

HUAC told him if he didn't answer they'd put him in the penitentiary. He said "let's go."

It may be that in the near future the news media will "discover" that Zellner and the others are reds who are infesting the community.

You may ask why Masonite Corp. should use HUAC, the FBI or some other agency to start a smear campaign. The answer is very simple. The company sees its interests as being the same as these witch hunting agencies. Masonite, like HUAC for example, is against strong unionism.

Masonite is no different from the construction company at De Ridder, Louisiana who, less than two weeks ago, asked Governor McKeithen to call in the State Police because some man on site struck against the company's use of non-union labor.

In this particular case, Masonite is faced, with not only our law-suit but, our solid unity and our determination to see this struggle through. Masonite's answer to our legal action should have been filed by Saturday, September 21st. We don't know yet what they said -- if they said anything at all. But we'll be surprised if they made a half-way good argument for the way they drew up the illegal sweetheart contract.

Finally, any reaction from Masonite must be understood in the light of what is going on inside the plant. Operations are not going half so well as management pretends. Perhaps Masonite thinks that no one sees the huge bon fires of reject boards it lights most nights. Or that no one knows that machinery maintenance is so bad, production could shut down anytime.

Masonite cannot bring these and other facts into the open. If it did, it might just lose its friends in the banks, and yes, the local Chamber of Commerce.

The Committee

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE MERCHANTS OF LAUREL

Last year You had your chance to help us by supporting the Masonite Strike effort. There was a meeting in the Laurel Courthouse and out of all you merchants there was only one man who stood up and spokeout in public for us. We haven't forgotten that. In over a year's time none of you have done anything to help end this strike. Now we are going to stand up again and find out who is with us and who is not.

Whether you know it or not the strike isnot over, and if you think it doesn't affect you, your're not thinking. If the union is broken and salaries go down your sales will go down too! SUCCESS FOR US MEANS SUCCESS FOR YOU. You better think it over because in the meantime we are taking our business elsewhere. We are going to support the stores that support us. Those include:

Bill Sampey - Five Point Texaco Station

Paul West - Beacon WestService Station

Doval Blue - Enco Station, Westside

W.J. Scruggs - Scruggs Bros. Service Station, Ellisville

Freddy Adcock - Texaco Service Station

Mike Corolly - Service Stationm, Ellisville.

Norman Lee - Lee's Processing Plant.

Shar Rahaim - Supermarket

We, and all our friends are boycotting all Chamber of Commerce members and members of the Retail Merchants Associatio of Laurel until they show public support for the Masonite men out on strike -- and individually or collectively exert pressure on Masonite to bring about a settlement.

Laurel, December 24th, 1963.

MEMO FROM SCAB CITY, MISSISSIPPI

DO YOU KNOW

* THAT ONLY 33 MASONITE PAYCHECKS WERE CASHED IN LAUREL LAST MONTH. WHERE DID THE OTHER 1,600 GO? WHERE DO YOU THINK THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEMBERS CASH THEIR CHECKS?

* THAT THE MAYOR GOES ELSEWHERE TO BUY HER FASHIONABLE CLOTHES?

* THAT LOCAL MERCHANTS ARE SELLING LAST YEAR'S STOCK ?

* WHY THE HEAD OF THE MASONITE PLANT MOVED HIS FAMILY OUT OF LAUREL ?

* WHY NEW INDUSTRY DOES NOT COME TO LAUREL ?

* HOW MANY PEOPLE HAVE MOVED OUT OF LAUREL TO FIND WORK THEY CAN'T GET HERE ?

* HOW MANY ACCIDENTS OCCUR AT THE MASONITE PLANT?

* HOW MASONITE VALUES HUMAN LIVES ?

Do you know what you can do about this, or do you care.

THINK!

ANOTHER LOOK AT CHICKEN LITTLE

The chicken littles have been yelping. Everybody knows that. Now they're going to have to do more than yelp. They're going to have to do some straight talking. It'll be a new experience for them.

Our lawyers have required that the Union chicken littles answer the question: just when and where, and by whose authority, they negotiated the sweetheart agreement. The lawyers have required that the Company chicken littles answer the same questions.

The lawyers have also required that the Union chicken littles explain just how they were able to impose a valid trusteeship without following any of the procedures required by the International Constitution. This is a little different from the questions the chicken littles have had to answer before. This time they have to tell the truth or face perjury charges.

When we finish with the chicken littles they may have no feathers left. You see, we hear thru the grapevine that the International is going ahead with the November 12 meeting in Memphis. There's a Federal Court hearing in Biloxi on November 12 to determine whether the November 12 meeting can be held. The Union chicken littles seem suddenly to have lost their respect for Federal Courts. SHAME, SHAME, on chicken littles.

US and THEM

The Company chicken littles have just issued a new financial report. It makes interesting reading. It says how they have made $8.5 million in take-home pay (profits to them) in the 12 months ending Aug. 31, 1968. That's a cool $4½ million more than they bled out of us in the same period ending Aug. 31, 1967. Who benefits? Well, mostly the chicken littles and all of chicken littles' friends. They divide up the profits. Some of it goes to the shareholders.

Now it shouldn't surprise us that the top chickens (they call themselves directors) are among the biggest shareholders. If you take the 12 top chickens together, they stand to make $1 million in dividends this year from their shares (in Masonite)

President and chairman, Mr. John Coates, will make $140,000 this year from dividends on his stock. That's in addition to the $110,000 salary he draws. Mr. Coates is a rich man. If he sold his shares tomorrow he'd get $3.4 million. That's a whole lot of Cadillacs, and fine houses and all. And this is not all. When he comes to retire, Mr. Coates will draw $25,000 a year.

So when we come to draw our dimes and cents, keep this in mind - that the profits chicken littles make is through our toil and sweat. That's why they're so fat.

It's a good enough reason for feathering them.

THE CHICKEN LITTLES YELP!

We told you the yelping would start.

An optimistic dose of prattle was published complimenting all concerned for achievements in the fields of production, quality, and safety that every working man, foreman and ex-management, in and outside Masonite knows is pure fiction of someone's sub-par imagination. We wonder, in the face of truth, if anyone has reported that this was the laughing stock of Laurel. Even our most ignorant citizen knows now if you lower your maximum standards of production, your percentage is correspondingly higher. He understands if you lower your requirements for quality, you can even produce imaginary 100% top grade products. Of course, this means you can squeeze all your customer orders to less than half an inch between two of your fingers, which would be considered real good for a tiny, tiny operation.

Old Joe Citizen knows, too, if you keep injured people around doing nothing but drawing pay checks, lost time accidents can be reduced. Does this mean accidents have ceased? Have you been listening real close lately? Pass the cigars, fellows!

We also wonder if the Chicken Littles know that over five hundred insiders voted and directed J. D. Jolly, Granville Sellers, Herbert Ishee and John A. West to be parties to the first lawsuit to correct this travesty of justice.

We note that other Chicken Littles are now getting concerned about democratic procedures, like closing the gate after the cows are out. This grand gesture of our International is understandable after a lawsuit is filed and, almost a year later, "we desire to review with you the advisability of a trusteeship". You noticed the big lie of "illegal strike" is still being pursued when the fact is that the Trusteeship was imposed as a condition of settlement by Masonite. We can expect such prattle when running in fear is dominating leadership in organizations with which we are forced to deal.

Why is the National Labor Relations Board still sitting on our charges? Has the fear of this situation permeated the Board and delay is paramount?

We predict that the truth, as always, will dominate and big money, crooked politics, weak leaders, and pompous management will fall by the wayside.

That day is approaching when crank swinging strike breakers go berserk.

We'll visit with you again in the very near future.

THE COMMITTEE

THE CONTINUING FIGHT OF LOCAL 5-443

"...And Ed was there where they had the other two people set up to discharge them at the time they discharged Freddie Adcock. I say that the strike was set up and Jesus Christ himself could not have prevented it."

-Granville Sellers, Vice President., 5-443

"...in the negotiations concluded March 3, 1967, I told the company that if they tried to combine classifications unilaterally and illegally, move jobs out of the bargaining unit to be filled by management personnel or cross departmental lines, that the plant would go down."

-J. D. Jolly, Pres., 5-443

THE STRUGGLE GOES ON

The plant did go down as everyone in Laurel knows. But how many know that it went down because this is what Masonite wanted? If this sounds strange then it might be because the only account of that strike, and the events since, has been put out by the same people who engineered the walk-out --- Masonite.

We feel the public deserves to have the record put straight. So this leaflet is addressed not only to our Brothers now back at work with Masonite, as well as those whom the company refuses to rehire, but also to the people of Jones County and neighboring counties. The fact is that THE STRUGGLE IS NOT OVER. It cannot be over while the Local remains under TRUSTEESHIP - while we work under an ILLEGAL SWEETHEART CONTRACT - and while so many of our Brothers are locked out by Masonite, simply because they are good union men.

COMPANY AND INTERNATIONAL MUST ANSWER

We have started legal action. We have charged the company before the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) with two unlawful act: discrimination against union men in rehiring strikers, and interference in the internal affairs of the Union.

We have also filed a suit in Federal Court, charging that the International Union acted illegally in forcing the Trusteeship on Local 5-443. In addition we have charged that the International Union and the company acted illegally in signing the December 6 sweetheart contract.

CHARGES BEFORE THE NLRB

Shortly after the strike began the International Union filed unfair labor practice charges against the company. An NLRB filed agent was sent to Laurel to investigate the charges. He recommended that the charges be withdrawn. When the International Union refused, the field agent recommended dismissal of the charges. The Regional Director in New Orleans ordered dismissal. The International Union appealed this decision to Washington, D. C., but withdrew the appeal as part of the deal (Dec. 6th, 1967) between the International Union and the company. So the situation is this - whether some 2,000 members of the Local are entitled to full benefits and back pay, was actually made on the judgement of one individual, an NLRB filed agent.

Early this year we decided an attempt should be made to get a square deal from the NLRB. On May 21st we discussed the whole situation with the NLRB. They agreed to accept charges of discriminatory rehiring, and interference in the internal affairs of the union. However, they absolutely refused to re-open the issue of whether the strike was legal or not. Now, more than three months after the filing of the charges, the NLRB has taken no action whatsoever.

---over---

CHARGES IN FEDERAL COURT

On August 23rd our lawyers filed suit in Federal Court in Hattiesburg. The suit is against the International Union and Masonite. It asks the Federal Court to do two things:

1. Declare the trusteeship forced upon Local 5-443 by the International Union, illegal. The National Labor Relations Act says clearly what trusteeship can be imposed for. The International Union cannot say it placed us under trusteeship for any reason stated in the Act. Even if it had legal reason, the trusteeship would be illegal because the International Union did not comply with the procedures laid down in its own Constitution.

2. Declare the sweetheart contract, signed December 6, 1967, illegal. We charge that the International Union violated its constitution and Local 5-443 by-laws by operating behind the back of the duly elected Local's negotiating committee in signing the sweetheart contract. We also charge that our membership wasn't given the chance to vote on the contract; a blatant violation of the International Union's constitution and Local by-laws.

We expect that the company and the International Union will be required to file answers to the suit by September 11th, or shortly thereafter.

MASONITE'S AIM

In the simplest possible words here is the situation. Masonite wanted our Union broken. It wanted the walk-out of April 21st last year. It is no secret that two Masonte officials came to Laurel for the purpose of finding out how the Union could be busted. Now these same officials we understand, have been invited to the shipyards at Pascagoula for the same purpose. Masonite wanted us trusteed, but they, themselves, couldn't do this. So they used some arm-twisting on the International Union. They said, in effect, if you don't agree to trustee Local 5-443 then we'll hit you for a $3 million damage suit.

Working conditions at the plant have gone from bad to worse since last December. Several men have been killed, many more have been injured. Little of this is public knowledge. The company has tried to hide it, just as it has tried to hide the fact that its present production is way below the quality produced before April 21st last year. Check the Stock Market reports on Masonite; they indicate what we believe to be the case - that Masonite is in bad shape financially and its credit threatened.

It's not hard to figure out that Masonite will not be pleased by the distribution of this leaflet. Why? Because the truth hurts. So if Masonite yelps, don't be surprised.

SO LET'S CONTINUE TO PULL TOGETHER TO CORRECT THIS GRAVE INJUSTICE TO SO MANY OF US. OUR MEETINGS WILL BE AT THE USUAL PLACE, EVERY SATURDAY, AT 5:00 P. M. YOU ARE URGED TO ATTEND.

Signed:
Hubert Davis
Raymond Posey
Melbourne Buckhaluts
James Neely
Ivory Garrett

STRUGGLE FOR THEIR UNION has brought black and white workers together in Laurel, Miss. James Nealey, left, discusses tactics with Raymond Posey. Both are members of the five-man committee directing the strike (photo by Mike Higson).

Laurel Struggle Continues

Workers Strike Back

By ROBERT ANALAVAGE
(Assistant Editor)

"...in the negotiations concluded March 3, 1967, I told the company that if they tried to combine (job) classifications unilaterally and illegally, move jobs out of the bargaining unit to be filled by management personnel, or cross departmental lines, that the plant would go down."

—J. D. Jolly, President, Local 5-443, International Woodworkers of America.

LAUREL, Miss.—The Masonite Corporation did just what Jolly warned it not to do, and the plant was shut down in a long strike which the workers charged was engineered by the company.

Granville Sellers, vice-president of Local 5-443, says: "That strike was set up and Jesus Christ himself couldn't have prevented it."

But the plant didn't stay shut down. Masonite obtained court injunctions against the strike and hired security guards from Wackenhut Corporation. It brought in strike-breakers from across the South, as well as students from Ole Miss and the University of Mississippi at Hattiesburg.

The company split many of the black workers from the mass of white strikers by a new system of playing one group against the other (see Southern Patriot for January, 1968, for details).

Masonite "Klan-baited" the local by spreading reports that it was run by Ku Klux Klansmen, and other unions gave little support.

After nine months of struggle, which saw five men killed, the international union placed Local 5-443 under trusteeship. The international officers then signed a contract with the company which the strikers called a "sweetheart deal." The strikers said they learned that Masonite had threatened the international union with a $3,000,000 suit if it didn't put the local in trusteeship.

Nineteen hundred men were thrown out of work. It looked as if the local was finished, but the strikers pulled themselves together and looked for ways to fight back.

Aid was offered by the staff of SCEF's Deep South project, Grass Roots Organizing Work (GROW). These staff people had been in touch with the strikers throughout the dispute.

Jack Peebles, New Orleans attorney and a vice-president of SCEF, was consulted. [illegible] that the Local 5-443

The workers held a series of rallies in an open field in an adjacent county (they were denied use of their own union hall). They voted unanimously to take legal action.

Charges were filed with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB). The board agreed to accept charges of discriminatory rehiring (strong unionists were not called back to work) and interference in the internal affairs of the local union.

However, the board refused to reopen the question of whether the strike was legal. Three months after filing of the charges, the NLRB had taken no action whatever.

Local Files Suit

So the local has filed suit in U.S. District Court against the international union and Masonite Corporation, asking for two things:

(Continued on Page 8)

tional Labor-Management Relations Act states clearly the conditions under which a trusteeship may be imposed. The suit charges that the international cannot claim any reason stated in the act for putting Local 5-443 under trusteeship. Even if it had legal reason, the strikers charge, the international didn't comply with procedures laid down in its own constitution.

ternational and the company on Dec. 6,

2. That the contract signed by the in-1967, be declared illegal. The local charges that the international violated the constitution and the local's by-laws "by operating behind the back of the duly elected negotiating committee of the local in signing the contract." The local also charges that the constitution and by-laws were violated when the membership wasn't given a chance to vote on the contract.

The strikers distributed throughout a five-county area a leaflet in which they say: "In the simplest possible words, here is the situation. Masonite wanted our union broken. It wanted the walkout of April 21 last year. It is no secret that two Masonite officials came to Laurel for the purpose of finding out how the Union could be busted.

"Now these same officials, we understand, have been invited to the shipyards at Pascagoula for the same purpose. Masonite wanted us trusteed, but they, themselves, couldn't do this. So they used some arm-twisting on the International Union. They said, in effect, if you don't agree to trustee Local 5-443 then we'll hit you for a $3,000,000 damage suit.

"Working conditions at the plant have gone from bad to worse since last December. Several men have been killed, many more have been injured. Little of this is public knowledge.

"The company has tried to hide it, just as it has tried to hide the fact that its present production is way below the quality produced before April 21 last year. Check the stockmarket reports on Masonite; they indicate what we believe to be the case — that Masonite is in bad shape financially and its credit threatened."

The community is full of rumors, as is always the case in such situations. One is that Masonite will dismantle the plant and move away. One striking worker commented: "That plant ain't doing me no good anyhow. I'll be glad to help them pack up the boards."

Another rumor is that Masonite, caught off guard by the strikers' solidarity, may give in to their demands. Things haven't worked out the way the company hoped and—well, it was, at least before the strike, able to turn out quality products at no small profit to itself.

As for the members of Local 5-443, they have taken other steps to strengthen their cause. It is no secret that Masonite was able to split many black workers from their union brothers because the local itself had not fought discrimination and injustice.

Today, however, the local has a five-man committee—three white, two black—which includes all workers in deliberations. It is a small but important step for their own common interest.

In another step, the workers are publishing their own newsletter to keep the community informed on what is happening. The local paper is hostile to their cause (it is controlled by Masonite), and the strikers see the need to speak out with their own voice.

The workers say in their leaflet that "the struggle is not over! It can't be over while the Local remains under trusteeship—while we work under an illegal sweetheart contract—and while so many of our brothers are locked out by Masonite, simply because they are good union men."

MEMO TO: The SCF Staff

FROM: Dottie Zellner

THEY SAID IT COULDN'T BE DONE---BUT WE'RE DOING IT!

I'm in a high state of elation, so I thought I'd send you all a joint letter to tell you of recent events in Laurel.

Things have moved very rapidly in the past two weeks. To sum up briefly, before giving you the details:

(1) meetings have been held between black and white unionists and black movement people like Mrs. Ruffin of the FDP (this was a combination meeting-confrontation);

(2) white union women are taking the initiative and going into the black community to meet with the black women;

(3) the union distributed clothing to victims of the recent train explosion (mostly black) and travelled through the city in a car caravan with signs saying "Local 5-443 supports the black community";

(4) the people are in the process of running a slate of candidates in the upcoming municipal elections which will be specifically working-class and interracial, black men, black women, white men, white women. We are advising them to run as independents but they may not. In any case, the class and racial nature of the campaign will obtain whether they run as independents or in the Democratic Party.

Thursday night was the scene of the confrontation-meeting between the black and white unionists, and the black movement people led by Mrs. Ruffin, who had supported the black strikebreakers last year because she felt it was important to support black men whatever they were doing. It started off very tense but conversation quickly got to the nitty and ended with sincere feelings of comradeship on both sides. (I might add at this point that, after a year's fruitless search to find a black person to work in Laurel, we finally got Walter Collins to go up there and he is doing excellent work in the black community.)

Samples of the conversation at this meeting:

BOB Z: "We're here to help bring white and black poor people together to fight the man, the companies, the rich people. We've seen this division go on too long."

MRS. RUFFIN (to the white people): "You let them do this to you." (She gave the parable of a chicken so busy scratching in the dirt for food that he never looks up to see who is giving the food out.)

(over)

Several people, bl k and white, spoke about the need for getting and staying together.

HERBERT ISHEE (originally reported to be a Klan member, but probably is not): "Mr. Garrett, if you run for Mayor, I'll be your campaign manager!" (Mr. Garrett is a black union member.) "Mrs. Ruffin, if you run I'll be behind you all the way....Naturally (smiling) if I run, I'll expect the same from you."

Interchanges continued. After the meeting, Mrs. Ruffin came over to Bob Z, grabbed his arm, and said: "Bob, a year ago I told you that you'd never be able to do this--but you have!"

Sunday, distribution of clothes ended in a black church, White people were standing in a black church for the first time in their lives. Bob started to sing and the black deaconess accompanied him on the piano. It ended up with everybody singing, black people coming from all over the neighborhood....Black people stood up and said: "We're sure glad to see you all (to the whites) but we want you to know, we don't want any hypocrites here!"

It ended up with black and white women in a meeting, talking about the strike and the campaign. A sample interchange between one white woman and Juanita Davis, who is a strong union woman and very racist: The woman said, "I never thought I could bring myself to shake a colored person's hand." Juanita: "I hate Masonite and the rich people so much I'm willing to do anything." !!!)

The meeting was similar to the Old Days in the singing, clapping, shouting and spirit. Only this time, there were local whites in there doing the singing and clapping. The blacks weren't subservient or obsequious, but very glad. One old black lady said to Bob: "I've prayed for this day."

Well, group, rhetoric aside, we're showing that it can be done. As Mike Higson said (he's one of our staff members): "We've moved mountains to go an inch." We're not deluding ourselves that this is the millenium...but, as far as I'm concerned, even if the whole thing collapses tomorrow, we will have shown beyond a shadow of a doubt that on the grassroots level it is possible to create working-class, inter-racial coalitions. Period.

And you must take into account that Laurel, Miss. is where all the killers come from, is the center of the Mississippi Klan. If we can do it there--well, we can do it anywhere. And by we I don't mean just our GROW project, but I mean blacks and whites everywhere. It took us a year and a half to get this far, and we don't know what will happen next, but by God, we're getting somewhere.

You realize that if they pull off this kind of campaign in Laurel it will be a first, not only for Mississippi, but for the whole South. So what do you think?

MOS ©IIIIZ/V ©U

All God's children
Ain't free
From the Sharecropper's shack
To the Penitentiary.

-- Johnny Cash

This article was written by Robert Analavage, Deep South correspondent for the Southern Patriot, and a member of the GROW staff.

a new movement in the white south

a new movement in the white south

a new movement in the white south

a new movement in the white south

By ROBERT ANALAVAGE

Rallies are held every Saturday in a cow pasture. The crowds vary in size from 55 (one cold, rainy day) to over 800 on a nice, sunny one. Cars stand in dual lines, many bumpers distinguished by faded WALLACE stickers. There are some black people in the crowd, but most are white.

A flatbed truck is situated in the middle of the pasture, and the speakers are talking about the struggles of working people and the need for black-white unity. The speakers are members of the GROW Project, which says it wants to build a mass movement across the South, to link black and white to change the system under which we live.

This is all taking place in Laurel, Miss., said to be headquarters for the White Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. It is a beginning.

GROW stands for Grass Roots Organizing Work, and is headquartered in New Orleans. It is a part of the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF). The GROW project is staffed by white veterans of the civil-rights movement (mostly former SNCC people). Its director is Bob Zellner, a 28-year-old Alabamian who was the first white field secretary for SNCC (1961), and one of the last whites to leave that organization.

The idea of such a project was conceived by Bob and Dottie Zellner, and two other white Southerners, Carl and Anne Braden, executive directors of SCEF. GROW field work began in 1967, and has made some modest but important gains.

REACHING WHITE SOUTHERNERS

How to begin to reach the poor and working whites in the South was the first question. The GROW staff had worked in the black communities of the Mississippi Delta, and had some credibility there. They went and talked with the local black people, old friends who had lived in that area for generations, and knew all there was to know about how people lived and worked and died there.

We got names of some poor whites and directions (there are no addresses in the rurals except a mailbox) and went visitin'.

We don't quite know what it was, perhaps Movement propaganda, but we were afraid of approaching these people. After all, in the innocence of the '64 Summer Project, we were told that these people were the enemy. They were said to be the ones who shot into the COFO freedom houses, beat you when you were walking the picket lines, poured the catsup over your head when you were integrating those greasy spoons fighting for the right of black people to eat terrible hamburgers---even if they could not afford them.

MISSISSIPPI DELTA children

What a pitiful mess we found.

The woman was obese --the kind of obesity that comes from eating all the greasy, fatty stuff the poor use to fill their bellies. She was lying in bed under a multitude of blankets, with a three- or four-year old child beside her. Periodically, the child -- whose only clothing was a shirt, would get up and walk outside. The child was what the medical profession calls mongoloid. It was 20 degrees outside, and there were puddles of ice in the yard.

The woman was sick with flu. Her husband, who worked in a nearby factory for $1.35 an hour, was sick too. His wife said she thought he had TB, but so far they had not got around to checking into it. She had a bottle of patent medicine and wondered if it might help her. However, she couldn't read and she asked us to check the label to see if there was anything harmful in it.

Before we left she wanted to know if we were connected with the War on Poverty. No, we told her--not the Government's, anyway.

We met a lot of these people.

Some dealt with the wretchedness of their lives with dreams and illusions, like the woman who was writing songs and sending them to a radio station (along with $2) in the hopes that someone would set her words to music and she would make a bundle, just like the announcer said she would.

Then there were those who faced reality with their own reality, like the man in Smith County who was peddling illegal booze and making a few bucks until he was arrested. His wife brought three children into the world, each one dying shortly after birth. And there was the chicken caretaker who looked after 35,000 chickens and made $35 a week. He was one of the more successful ones. But then his house did not have a bathroom, and the family performed the necessary bodily functions off the back porch, and emaciated dogs carried the mess away.

And the man in the Delta who received $10 a week, plus the right to live in a three-room shack, for herding cows for his boss-man. He had eight children, one a small infant, and he "supplemented" his income with government surplus food. There was the 28-year-old man who had no toes on either foot (he cut them off while chopping wood), who was going to marry his 12-year-old first cousin, and who didn't even have a job prospect. This is what sociologists must mean when they talk about the cycle of poverty.

We invited about 30 of these people, which included some small children and teenagers, to New Orleans for a weekend of workshops. It was impossible to meet in their own communities, because they were as frightened of the authorities as black people were until the sixties (a sharecropper wanted to attend a literacy class, but was sure his boss-man would disapprove of it).

That New Orleans workshop, plus subsequent visits to the poor people in the Delta, in their own communities, led us to conclude that they were thoroughly and tragically beaten. Unlike poor blacks, who have the strength of an organized movement to look to, they lacked spirit and the hope that something could be done which might alter their lives.

What they desperately need now is welfare, housing, food, medicine---in other words, social services. We do not have the resources to provide these things and do not see it as a part of our program to do so. These are people who must eventually be a part of any movement we build, but they do not have the strength to be the spearhead of it.

LAUREL AND THE LONG STRIKE

In the summer of 1967 we began making visits to Laurel, Miss., where there was a labor struggle between Local 5-443 of the International Woodworkers of America (IWA) and the Masonite Corporation, the largest producer of hardboard in the world. The plant had been organized since 1939.

Both management and labor agreed that Local 5-443 has been the most militant union in the South on economic issues. In 1967 the local had a membership of close to 3,000, about 75 per cent of it white. The company tried to push through a plant-reorganization plan (partial automation) which would have eliminated jobs and increased individual work loads. The local struck. The strike lasted 7 1/2 months and it was bitter; the repercussions have yet to be fully felt. The struggle is still going on. This report has not the space to tell all that happened; a running account can be had from The Southern Patriot, 3210 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky. 40211. A capsule of what occurred is:

(1) The company effectively 'Klan-baited' the local. This was not hard to do in Jones County, where in the past many klan members have been arrested on charges ranging from intimidation to murder. Yet to charge the local with being klan-controlled is absurd. In 1964, after the local did away with its all-black sub-local and brought black and white workers together, an officer of the local was flogged by klansmen. The local officials bought a full-page ad in the Laurel Leader-Call and threatened war on the Klan. They warned that "blood would flow in the streets" if further such incidents occurred. They did not occur. Just before the strike ended in December, 1967, the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party, mostly black, passed a resolution supporting it. Yet, it is important to note that there are people in the rank and file of the klan who are also in the rank and file of the local.

(2) Management posed as the friend of black people by integrating showers, drinking fountains, etc. Of course the company was simply complying with a federal order, but it must be pointed out that the local had supported certain segregationist practices inside the plant. The company's pose as a friend of the black workers, however, became more ludicrous when our research showed that it has a plant in Johannesburg, South Africa. Yet this tactic lured at least half of the black strikers back to work. White strikebreakers were imported from across the South. During the summer of 1967, almost the entire football squads from Ole Miss and the University of Southern Mississippi at Hattiesburg were recruited.

WACKENHUT guards Masonite

(3) Injunctions were obtained against the local to end picketing. Even before the strike began, however, Masonite hired Wackenhut security guards and set up sandbag bunkers and machine-gun nests on company property. Gun towers still dot the plant area. The company even bought a gas station situated near a plant entrance, where workers would congregate and ordered them off the property. During the strike, five men were alleged to have been killed. We have been able to authenticate one death--that of a Wackenhut guard who had been killed with a shotgun.

(4) Masonite production declined both in quantity and quality; it had to sell 35 million dollars worth of prime timber to St. Regis Paper Company. It brought a 3 million dollar suit against the international union. The international then (a) negotiated a new contract with the company, and (b) imposed a trusteeship on the local, seizing the local union hall and its finances, and then removing the local officers. Masonite then dropped its suit.

(5) 2,100 men, many of whom had worked at Masonite for 20 and 30 years, were thrown out of work. Christmas was three weeks away. They felt that their own international had sold them out. They couldn't even get a local attorney to help them--indeed, the local attorney who had represented them received $25,000 on condition that he would not represent the local in any future litigation. At the end of 1968, more than 800 of the strikers have not been taken back because they are considered strong unionists. About 1,600 now do the work that once required 2,100 men.

Anyone who is serious about building a movement in the South would do well to recognize what formidable opponents we have, as shown by the power and resources used by Masonite in this strike. GROW's Mike Higson adds:

> In Laurel, Masonite has economic, political and propagandistic control. It is a company town. Masonite is the largest employer in a two- or three-county area. In 1966 it effectively shut out St. Regis Paper Company by the simple expedient of upping its labor force by 1,000. It did not want a competitor in the local labor market. Masonite doesn't own the local media, but since it is a heavy advertiser, the one TV station, several radio stations, and the only newspaper all reflect a pro-business, conservative stance. Outside of these institutions are the banks, the businesses, and the Chamber of Commerce, all of which depend heavily on the weekly Masonite payroll. Jones County is a colony and the mother country is in Chicago. This year ('68) the labor in Laurel will send back a good part of Masonite's net profit of 8.4 million dollars to Chicago, where the company has its head office.

While the strike was going on, the GROW staff met many times with the strikers. At the time of the strike, what the local needed most was to get the black men out of the plant and back on the strike. But the black unionists were bitter over the second-class role they had in the local; on the other hand, they had profited from a strong union and their wages were higher than other black Mississippi workers.

BOB ZELLNER talks to striking workers

The winds of change blow---and the winds said that whites do not work and organize in black communities. Our hope was to form a joint project with some black organizers around common interests, to defeat the company in its efforts to divide. We would work with the whites---as we already were---and the black organizers would work in the black community. If we could show that a black-white coalition could be built in Mississippi, its impact on the movement would be tremendous and spur others. Concessions would have to be made by the white unionists---that is, participation by black men in union affairs---and a strong black caucus would probably have to be built. But black groups contacted in Mississippi and on the national level were unresponsive. GROW could not wait until it had the cooperation of black groups in the movement, and decided to go it alone. The situation was drastic, the men now had nobody to turn to, morale was bad, and people began drifting away. The men wanted to battle it out in the courts and they wanted our assistance.

JACK MINNIS discusses strategy

Jack Minnis, SCEF's Research Director, has a talent for finding flaws in the system. He used to be in charge of research for SNCC, where he found an obscure Alabama law that eventually led to the formation of the Lowndes County Freedom Party (whose symbol is the black panther). Minnis pored over all the strike data he could find, and learned that the international union had violated its own constitution in imposing the trusteeship and signing the contract with Masonite. Jack Peebles, a New Orleans attorney and a vice-president of SCEF, went to court for the local. The suit is still in the courts because of charges and counter-charges brought by the international and Masonite. The intensity of the court battle may best be appreciated if it is mentioned that Hulse Hayes, of the law firm which wrote the Taft-Hartley Act of 1946, heads a five-lawyer team for Masonite, while the international is using a Little Rock law firm which includes one ex-Governor, plus the former Commissioner of the Arkansas Public Service Commission.

MEETINGS had to be held in the woods, in a nearby county....

On the organizational level, we have been holding rallies and workshops, building trust and a feeling of unity. Good rapport exists between GROW and the white working class community in Laurel. We have been able to do this while keeping our relations with black, anti-war and student movements. It has been honest from the beginning; in our first meetings with the strikers, we told them about our background with SCEF and SNCC. After a pause, their response was: "We don't care about that---what can you do to help us?" A five-man committee has been formed from the local union to coordinate their struggle. Three are white, two are black. Morale is still a problem, but these are hard men.

None of this is really dramatic, but we feel it is fruitful. For instance, Jack Minnis used one rally to explain their law suit in terms of the whole nature of the state and federal judicial systems and Sen. James Eastland's role in selecting federal judges. "If there's justice in the courts we will win," he said, "because the law is supposed to be on your side. If we can't win in the courts, we will have to try something else." His theory is that if you are going to change the system, you must first understand it. A lot of people in Jones County are beginning to.

STRIKING workers and wives attend weekly meetings

We believe that the most important aspect of this project is that we have broken out of the isolation from working whites which has plagued the movement for freedom. Our relationship with them is good. We have been accepted into their homes, eaten and slept there, and they have visited us in New Orleans at the GROW Educational Center. This is a large building we've purchased for use as a training center for future struggles--presently shut down by the City of New Orleans in a maze of harassing building regulations.

Discussions range from our experiences in the civil-rights movement to various political positions we and they hold. Right now we have fraternal relations with rank-and-file members of the Klan. We've sipped moonshine, discussed Wallace, and drunk beer into the wee small hours in a bar which we were told was a headquarters for the Klan.

We've talked to similar folk in the Carolinas, in Georgia, in Alabama, in Louisiana. They've been used ---badly---and they've been ignored. A klansman in North Carolina wrote an article for a liberal Southern churchmen's journal. Listen to some excerpts, and you will get an insight into their bitterness:

> "We gonna take the government and everything else we can lay our hands on away from you. We gonna take it back. And we gonna do this because you not fit to run it. You been stealing the country blind, you been sucking up to niggers and forgetting 'bout our problems. You send our boys over to Vietnam to fight an undeclared war and then send our boys home again in wooden boxes. And your boys go to college and get draft deferments.
>
> "You laughed at us. You scorned us and mocked us and teased us. We poured into the cow pastures of Carolina by the hundreds and then by the thousands. And we was right there in the open, bleeding, and you didn't bring bandages. Not you! You sent the FBI. We remember that. We never fergit that thief Lyndon Johnson on the television telling us to 'get out of the Klan and return to decent society, now before it is too late.' Dumb Lyndon didn't even know we was in the cow pastures in the first place because we was running from a society that he helped make indecent.
>
> "Yes, its true we ignorant.
>
> "Yes, its true we hate.
>
> "Yes, its true some of our crazy brothers go out of their skulls and do awful things.

"Yes, its true we poor and diseased and wear ole clothes not fit to do much of anything 'cept maybe a plow jockey.

"Now the question:

"How come they so many of us? What in the world kind of country you been runnin' all these years? I really don't think we could possibly do any worse, an we might just do a whole heap better."

If there is any possibility of changing this country for the better, people like the above must be organized. George Wallace has exploited their plight, and they voted for him because they did not have anyone else to vote for. The Movement must offer an alternative to Wallace and his organization, and that is what we are trying to do. In the fall of 1968, in Lowndes County, Ala., we met some Black Panthers from Oakland, Calif., who had come down to make sure nothing happened to local people on election day. We discussed what we were doing and one of them said: "If you can get to those kind of white folks and we could get to the blacks---man, nothing would stop a movement like that!"

The South is a colony and its black and white inhabitants are exploited like the inhabitants of any colony (check out where the boards of Southern companies reside and where the profits go. For example, Masonite). We must begin to develop research and consciousness along these lines, and we must be able to explain this to people at the grass roots. And to get information to people at the grass roots, you must first go there and gain their confidence and trust.

The way Bob Zellner put it at a workshop with Laurel unionists is:

> "What we are trying to do is carry on the work of really organizing grass roots in the South like in Laurel, Miss. If we had the kind of organization we hope to have in a year or so, the fight would involve a lot of people across the South, and not just be between labor and management in one town.
>
> "The question is---have we started something that will get the working people of the South together, politically and economically? I believe that we have."

TWO MEMBERS of the five-man committee that now directs the strike

For further information, write to:

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL FUND
3210 W. Broadway, Louisville, Ky. 40211

GRASS ROOTS ORGANIZING WORK
731 Napoleon, New Orleans, La. 70115

Contributions to help in the work of GROW should be sent to SCEF at the Louisville address. Checks should be made to SCEF and may be earmarked for GROW if you wish.

People across the country are forming a committee to support the Laurel workers by refusing to buy Masonite products. If you would like to work in your community on this effort, contact:

JANE McMANUS
AD HOC COMMITTEE IN SUPPORT OF MASONITE WORKERS
110 St. Marks Place, New York, N.Y. 10009
New York, N.Y

Laurel Mills

AN ENEMY OF THE PEOPLE

How the Draft is Used to Stop Movements for Social Change

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

For the Fifth Circuit

No. 27,[illegible]

[illegible]

Plaintiffs-Appellants

vs.

[illegible] Warren Chemical, Individually and as Trustee of, and International Workmen's of America, AFL-CIO, and Masonite Corporation,

Defendants-Appellees

Appeal from the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi

---

Brief for Appellees Warren Chemical and International [illegible]

Barnes H. Yoemans, Jr.
McMath, [illegible], Woods & Youngdahl
711 West Third Street
[illegible] Little Rock, Arkansas 72201

T. Hayes Hederman
Hederman and Hederman
1501 Deposit Guaranty Bank Building
Jackson, Mississippi 39205
Attorneys for Appellees

[illegible] Law Printing Co., Inc., [illegible] St., [illegible] [illegible]

Act - Kelly

Lawerence Kelly, Harry Boyte, Richard Landerman-Durham-July 7, 1969

Kelly in '67 was second in command of the C.A.P. in Durham called Operation Break-Through. Richard Landerman had done some work in the white community as a work study student at Duke. Harry Boyte had also been involved in some capacity in the white community. Landerman had been working with the Patlock Park area but left after graduation to help with a labor strike in E. N. C.

By the fall of '67 the anti-poverty efforts in Durham had become almost completely black. In '64 there had been some participation in the Edgemont Community but as the Black Power concept developed among the blacks the whites withdrew. In Sept. '67 Lawerence Kelly put in a proposal with O.B.T. for 3 people to work with the white community and it was approved. One of the number (which turned out to be 4) was Landerman.

All through the spring of '68, Kelly negotiated with the regional O.E.O. office in Washington for a grant for the white community. He wanted to get money directly from Washington rather than from O.B.T. because to do the latter would offer opportunities to strain relations too easily. He argued with Washington on the basis that whites were being systematically or rather actually excluded from the poverty fight and what O.E.O. was really doing in most cases was funding black groups.

He received a grant to operate his program through O.B.T. but specifically designated for his program which was called Experiment in Parallel Organization. The grant was for the period from July-September. In September the program was refunded on a smaller budget for a period of a year.

[Landerman said he expected it to be refunded for next year but not for the year after that. By that time he felt that the effort would be contraversial which it is not at present and the apparent drift of national politics woul work to cut off funds.]

Financed mostly bu the O.E.O. grant a non-profit corportaion was started and filled out early in '69. At present the Executive Committed of ACT is made up of one representabive of the 10 operating adult councils, one representative from the old age strata (Edgemont and Few(sp) Gardens) and one representative from the youth strata (Edgemont, Erwin, Greystone, and Patlock). The ex. Committee meets as necessary. The local councils meet regularly on a 2-3 week basis with and average attendance of 10-15 which fluctuates from 6 or 7 to 20 depending on the council and the things to be discussed. (Kelly sees ACT made up of the senior citizen, the adult, and the youth councils existing together as parallel structures.)

Act organizes on a geographic base. I mentioned that Tommy Martin in a rural area was using a co-op as the on-going structure around which to do impact or issue organizing. Kelly said that the poor whites in Durham (which Landerman thought could apply to urban areas in general) had more of a sense of identity as a community and didn't need to be based on some special structure. Kelly said they used services as an organizing tool. Landerman and Boyte catogorized their method more as building up a series of successes on issues of local interest such as street signs. They can easily win on this issue and use it to develop a sense of identity in the community. They want to bring people together in a collective experience and develop a community consciousness. HL ?

Kelly says that white people haven't had any identity. The see themselves as individual failures and are easily manipulated as a result of it. The number one concern of the program in Kelly's opinion is to give these people identity. He thinks possibly that once identity is developed and the people see that they are being used by the controllers of power in the community, then possibly some of the racist attitudes they have will also break down because they will replace one enemy with another. He says that they use Southern consciousness and N.C. consciousness in order to help organize. He agrees at least in part with Tommy Martin on this subject that this consciousness can not be used in an abstract or intellectual manner but must be used in connection with their day to day experiences to interpret them. (Although he is not sure how to interpret it, Patlock whih has been organized longest seems to have the most integration.)

Unlike Al Henry, Kelly say that the poor workers are the easiest to work with. The very poor have not yet developed any kind of political consciousness and this makes them less easily worked with. HL

Kelly says that in this work you will really be race baited but replies that maybe that's not so bad. He is really insensed by the way the poor white is set up as the target and constantly attacked instead of recognizing that he is manipulated by some of the same factors as the black man. ~~Kelly thinks that it was a d~~ Landerman and Boyte who have a very positive impression of the work in Laurel, Miss. see much of the criticism of this work as similar to the race baiting they are constantly hit with.

Kelly thinks it to have been a definite advantage to have a strong black organization in Durham. The concept of "rights" upon which Walt Anderson puts so much emphasis is useful as one of a "bag of tools" in organizaing whites. Kelly sees as possibly more important, the function that the strong black group played in getting rid of the great liberal idea of working together which has worked out so badly in the past.

Kelly says there is a "beautiful"relationship with Howard Fuller and most of the black organization in Durham. When he began Fuller told him that he whuldn't be able to organized poor whites even thoug Fuller in general bys the line that the problems are problems of the poor. In the last year Kelly sees a basic change in black attitudes toward the program. They occasionally get some flack from the blacks, but it is generally accepted that they are each working toward some similar goals while operating among their own people, which is something Fuller and the blacks in Durham are very insistent on.

Landerman and Boyte believe that it may be possible to organize blacks and whites together in the same basic organization in other places but not in Durham. They see it as expecially possible in a labor strike situation such as exists at Laurel.

The goal of these three and ACT in general is to co-operate through coalitions on specific issues. This has worked in the past on the issue of the participation of the poor in the school aid given to impacted areas under the Elementary and Secondary Educ. Act of '64. The city had set up a dummy committee to fulfill this requirement. Most of the residents didn't even know about it. The issue was raised by the leadership (k.,l., b.) and an integrated group confronted the city. The city gave in rather easily and now ACT and U.C.O.I. (United Organization for Community Improvement), a non-profit private black corporation similar to ACT and in fact to a degree the pattern on which ACT was organized)are now the designated poverty representatives for E.S.E.A. Blacks and whites have also worked together in planning the Youth Program for the summer. The white Teen Councils and the black youth group Y.O.C.A. (Youth Organization Committed for Action?) planned the summer program (which included playgrounds at Patlock Park, E. K. Powe School and Edgemong Community Center on the white side) and got it funded by O.E.O. (I'm not sure whether this was regional O.E.O. or O.B.T.). Out of the funds which were joint planned each group got its separate bag. Edgemont has also integrated its Community Center and Community Clinic. In the opinion of the three, the coalition idea is the only legitimate one for Durham and one that holds a god bit of promise.

The staff working with ACT is made up of 12 regular members, 5 neighborhood employees (think just for summer) and 6 Duke students (summer also).

Is it coalition between separate organizations vs. an integrated group?

In organizing ACT they started out with an almost completely un-politicized group and worked to develop a consciousness of their interests. At the present point Kelly feels that the local residents are bringing up 50% of the issues. They brought up the need for school bus transportation for children within the city which resulted in a group going to the local school board and convincing them to make this request in the State Legislature. Kelly feels in many ways this was a victory for the local people in that they were able to act collectively and move the school board in some direction. They also initiated an issue involving deserted houses which the city has failed to tear down (more on that later). In general Kelly seems most interested in developing the consciousness and giving the people a feeling of their own power than in pushing them in a certain direction.

Landerman and Boyte (primarily)

They organize from a rudimentary political base. The membership card they state their desire to win their right. They work in a geographical area which is somewhat arbitrarily defined but the is consideration given to who the local residents feel should be included in the council. Boyte sys the only problems they have had with councils is when they are too large.

Landerman says they are more concerned with building something that will last than plunging themselves into some contraversal area. They realize that in order to build confidence and develop a consciousness in the people that they must win and win repeatly. Landerman also seems to take this line when talking about the problems of organizing the poor. He says organizing poor blacks is more exciting, especially when you develop a "facist" response and have your funds cut off. Then you can beat your brest and talk about the "rednecks." But if you really want to work toward some basic solutions, poor white organizing is where its at.

Boyte says there are several key points in their organizational method: 1. small victories, aiming at building collective identity. 2. popular control in all issues. 3. A cultural base, giving the poor white something of his own to be proud of and to be able to plug into without selling out to the established culture such as wrestling and square dancds. Most council meetings have some social aspect besides some small issue to keep interest up. This cultural deminision seems to be very important in the theoritical frame of Boyte, something that is associated with every meeting, something that they feel they have not had the time and resources it deserves, and and area in which they hope to put future effort.

Besides E.S.E.A. which is in the province of the ACT Educ. Committee and

Elem & Sec Ed Act

What is the project

how relate to public Schools

ESEA

Aid to impacted area

a Bd of poor on hand to spend — tought red-haired

the major project of this committee, the other major action program of ACT is coming in the area of housing. This is also the issue on which they are thinking of taking on a contraversal subject.

At present there are three deserted houses in I think the areas of one or two councils. These houses are at times used by "drunks" and some of the neighbors dislike their remaining unattended and not being torn down by the city. ACT is going to push the city in this area and check, if pressure fails, to see if the city is violation federal statutes. They are also coming out with sometime this summer a Housing Bill of Rights written by Boyte. Boyte (who seems to have the clearest view of and interest in some tpye political force being developed out of ACT) sees this Bill as something that they will use to build a more politically active group and more important a stronger and larger group which will have the power to with stand attacks and will be a force on a city-wide basis. The Bill will also be a means of testing out local interest in the issue and reaction of the power structure to see if it is practical and valid to push this issue. After the building of the larger, stronger base, Boyte forsees some type structure being created to insure housing code enforcement and possibly to build, through a corporate structure, housing for the poor. Kelly men saw a tenant's union of sorts resulting from the housing issue with ACT serving as the bargaining agent. It should be noted that Boyte saw the housing issue as a way to build a stronger sense of power and consciousness as well as a legitimate issue that should be pushed along. Kelly said that the immediate next move would be the attendance of a number of local people at the next city council meeting. He said that the local people were really interested in this issue.

ACT supposedly has seven different programs. ED. Committee is concerned with tutoring during the school year and E.S.E.A. 2. Job Information helps serve as a brokerage for jobs-has gotten a number of persons jobs. 3. Consumer information is defunct. 4. Housing and 5. Welfare rights and important issues delt with by the ex. committee. 7. The ACT Support Group is made up primarily of Duke people who help cordinate activities such as tutoring with the University and who have raised $300 for the program.

ACT also operates a Day Care Center which a committee of 8 or 9 handles (I'm not sure who makes up the committee). In addition, it operates two playgrounds (It is also locally controlled but I'm not exactly sure from what groups the committee members are chosen).

-One important point is that the organizers can not become official members of ACT and are not allowed to have voting power.

Ex. Committee meetings helps to give the people some idea that they are involved in a large effort involving the whole community. Local council meetings besides providing a lot of socializing gives people a place to discuss their problems, which is basic to the meeting, and gives the organizers time for some political discussion, which is very important at the ex. committee meetings. At the local council meetings the attendance is 3 to 1 women.

These three got their idea of organizing from civil rights and union organizing and trial and error. One thing important in their approach is that they follow the tactics that seem to be immediately most promising whether that be "rights" or something else. They seem very flexible and very free of rhetoric.

At present they are doing some VISTA training some of whom attempted to work with poor whites, they think not too effectively in Fafetteville, N.C. They started doing this when they were asked to come to Greensboro 4-5 months ago to train some VISTA's and the State VISTA? co-ordinator liked what they did. He asks them to come back occasionally (Thinks his name is Tom Morgan, a black man.).

They see ACT 1. serving as a practical model for working with poor whites and 2. as a theoritical and intellectual model to work out problem in technique in dealing with problems surrounding the poor white, the poor black, the Wallace type, the Klan type, the lack of political consciousness, etc.

One point they emphasized is that they are experimental and not yet fully developed by any means. They can't give any final answere on how it's done or where the organization will go.

They are thinking about forming a co-op but do not feel well enough established yet to do it.

Might be able to find some written materials in the Levathan, or Hard Times done by Kopkind, or in New Left Notes, exp. an article done by Youngblood on JOIN.

JOHN H. WHEELER, PRESIDENT
JOSEPHINE WILKINS, VICE-PRESIDENT
PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER, VICE-PRESIDENT
CHARLES G. GOMILLION, VICE-PRESIDENT
LUCIUS H. PITTS, VICE-PRESIDENT
RAYMOND M. WHEELER, CHAIRMAN, EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE
JOSEPH HAAS, COUNSEL
PAUL ANTHONY, EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W. ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

A Council to attain the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South

Check rec'd 1/5/70

July 16, 1969

Written off account Jan. '70 RV

Rights of Man
P. O. Box 30028
New Orleans, Louisiana 70130

Dear Sir:

I am doing a study on poor white organizing in the South and am very interested in the work of GROW. I would like to make three requests: (1) to receive the first issue of the Rights of Man and all subsequent copies of it that are available; (2) to be sent a copy of an article in The Southern Patriot written by Dottie and Bob Zellner; (3) to obtain a subscription to the Rights of Man -- enclosed is our check for $2.00.

All materials and invoices should be sent to the following:

Mr. Emory F. Via, Director
Labor Program
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
5 Forsyth Street, N. W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

Sincerely,

Robert P. Mosteller

Robert P. Mosteller

Sorry — ask Paul Anthony why! Jack Minnis

RPM/km

Enc. - Check $2.00

Excuse delay !

R.O.M.

Lawrence Kelly-ACT-Durham, N. C.-August 11, 1969

-Further developments of ESEA funds-- Met together with the school board last of July. This was a group of 15 people which had been oked at the June meeting. The blacks through UOCI and the white through ACT got together and decided since the blacks had more children going ot the impacted area schools, then they would get 9 reps. and ACT would get 6. ACT has an Education Committee made up of one member from each Council (I think each adult council -- there are now 12 adult councils, 4 youth councils, and 1 old age council). This committee decided that the 6 white reps. would be elected from the councils in the affected areas. This meant one council elected three of the six, another 2 and another 1.

The meeting with the school board was the "classic intial confrontation." The board said that poor people didn't have anybusiness in educational matters. They operated on the basis of professional elitism. The people responded that in their neighborhoods over one out of two people drop out before they graduate, and no one had done anything about this. After the poor people said this, the school board allow as they had some business there. It was too late for them to affect the school budget for this year since it was to be submitted the day after the meeting. However, they won the point that they would be in the process with the budget from the beginning for next year, even thoug it will mean redical changes in the expenditure of funds.

Dick and Lawrence did most of the talking. Kelly says that the people just weren't ready to handle the sophisticated arguments of the school board.

This is the entering wedge of the battle on school issues. This was a good place to begin because they had federal guidelings to his the school b. with.

The will soon begin meeting with the school board on the budget for next year.

-Within the last month (He didn't remember the exact date) they took a group from the Angier Street Council supported by council members throughout the city to the City Council meeting to ask that a house in the neighborhood be torn down. They had gone through a number of steps to get to this point. Went first to the Building Inspector, then the Committee on Public Works, then the Committee of the Whold of the City Council(which sets the agenda for the next meeting. Kelly said it was important to have this issue set to come up first because if you don't they will try to bore you to death. The argument they used to the Committee was that there were a number of old women in the group and thus needed it first. They succeeded in setting that issue first.), then the City Council. There was about half a douzen? from the Angier St. Council and a total of 75 people from across the city from ACT.

Political interest: Compact agencies —

But also elect new people to City Council —

(remember — ACT separate from the People's Committee)

Some confusion

The City Council voted unaminously to have the owner of the property tear the house down. The man had been represented at the meeting by his lawyer. The ACT people were really impressed by the fact that the city council would listen to them when they spoke in a group like that.

The Housing Committee of ACT met last week with Harry Boyte to develop a plan of action for about 6 houses that the people in various neighborhoods see as dangers to them. They want to get them all up to the same point and then dump them all in the City Council's lap together. To do this they first want to go to the Building inspector to see what action has been taken on them and then go to the land lord and find out what he says the status of them is. Kelly says that if you don't first go to the building inspector the land lord will lie to you. One land lord owns about 4 of the houses which they are concerned about. With concerted action on several at one time they can get action from him. He has been saying that he is willing to co-operate if they will just tell him what to do first - so they'll tell him what to do first. Kelly also sees and advantage in lumping them together in connection with the organizational concept of small victories. If they are all together they will get one or two torn down, a couple boarded up and a couple having their lawns mowed and cleaned up. Together this will look like a major victory rather than separate it would have looked as if they lost on all but the one they got torn down.

They want to use these houses together with the Housing Bill of Rights to develop the consciousness of the people. They want to point out to them how the housing conditions and that vacant house right over there where they see it every day has to do with property taxes and assessments, the collection of rents, the policies of the city gov't. etc. In general see it as exploitation by people with different interests who hold power and therefore ti is necessary to redistribute power. The Education issue they plan to relate to the nature of the distrubution of power and point it toward the reformation of the city gov't

Durham right now is 5000 housing units short. Kelly says that if there is a oligarchy in Durham it is the housing oligarchy and sees the housing issue as number 1 in the city. The policy of this oligarchy is to keep low class housing in short supply so they can keep up the rents. When they tear down the low class housing they build middle and upper income units and keep the system going. Because of the shortage they can fail to keep the houses in repair without facing any penalty from those who rent them.

(Says in any community organization work you should develop a series of steps at to what you should do. The housing committee was developing this. The list might go: land lord to bld. insp. to city council to burning it down.)

With the houses and the Bill of Rights they plan to start pushing the housing issue. One of the most important goals they are striveing for is a section written into the Housing Code to allow for the non collection of rent if the house fell below a certain level. Kelly says this section is to be found in the Codes of the more progressive cities. ACT would serve as the tennants union and would collectively and selectively use this power to move on the housing issue.

Housing is really hard to work with. That issue wore Fuller out. Housing people run the city. 7 out of 9 members of the city council are either directly or indirectly tied to housing interest (either realestate owners, land lords, or financial man who rely on housing for a major percentage of their funds.) Kelly says people will understand and can be organized against people who oppose them and their interests because of identifiable reasons for opposition such as property ownership and housing ties.

There appeared to be a difference in the confidence of Kelly from the last time I was there and his willingness to challeng those in power. He confirmed this change though admitted that they were still scared. In the early stages they could have been killed by effective red or race baiting but they didn't meet it because they were unknown. Now they are not nearly as woried about publicity. They have a big enough base so the people couldn't be scared off. The Durham Sun has done a two part article on them. He thinks they could mobolize 100 people for the biggest issue. At a recent picnic they had 300 people out.

Part of the reason at least for their growth was the fact that Housing and ESEA worked out really well for them. These things happened since I was last in Durham.

In general it is a hell of a lot easier to organize now than in the early days. They now have successes to point to. Before they had to lie. They told the people on the West Side of town how well the people on the EAST side were doning and vice versa. Now the victory with the house is spreading around. Also, the people on that side of town can look at the house which they used to pass every day. This direct sight only applies to one side of town but on the other they have Pattlock Park.

ACT has always had a good relationsip with the blacks in Foundation for Community Development and the UOCI. The blacks are interested in doing their thing and want whites to do theirs or at least don't mind it. (ACT does catch it for being racist. One black woman says that the people in Edgemont were ready to integrate before ACT came in and now they're not. Fred Richardson, a Duke Student who had worked with blacks and now works with whites was felt out by the blacks as to whether he was turning into a racist.) The"really beautiful blacks" are organizing on the Pan-Africanism theme and that of don't trust any white man. There is a lot of mutual ~~distrust~~ suspicion. The Blacks realise that before they have trusted the white man and co-operated with him and been co-opted into some main stream effort for the white man. They aren't interested in having this happen to them again. The whites can get so-operation on anything where thay have power and the blacks need ti. Before they will think of co-operation however, the whites have to have the power. They black community has been organized for some time now but they haven't gotten much ~~from~~ from it because they white liberals didn't give them enough support. ACT is developing potential to help them.

-No feelsrs have come forward yet on housing. ACT hasn't developed it well enough in the white community yet. The blacks are sick of the issue. They have been beaten so badly on it before. Kelly sees a probable coalition on housing some where in the future.

(Really seems that one of the basic reasons for the difference in the approach of Zellner and ACT is the state of organization in the ~~white~~ black community. First of all in Durham the blacks don't want to co-operate until the whites have their thing together. In Laurel, Zellner seems to be saying that the blacks are ready to co-operate but somewhat wary. They will co-operate if they can only get assurances of the sincerity of the whites and their own position of power and importance with in the community. Zellner also seems to be wanting to organize a black community which has no strong organization at the same time he works with the whites. In Durham the black community is together. Zellner may be organizing whites and blacks together because they both have common interests and neither of them are organized. Also Zellner may need to get them together early to prevent the whites from turning facist while there is not this danger in Durham or at least it is not as real with the strong black community paralleling the white one.)

The ACT staff seems to be doing a good bit of out reach work. They went to the meeting of white organizers at the Highlander Center. Boyte speaks at a number of universities. Dick and Lawrence? do VISTA training. He says that the VISTA'S besides the natural class anomosities are trained to oppose the poor whites. They come out of the civil right bag and thus hate red necks.

-Kelly told of two other efforts to organize whites in the state.- In Fayettevill and Sampson Co. The guy in Fay. is a ACT VISTA trainee. Things down there are really messed up. They had attempted to go down and straighten out the CAP director who thought the VISTA was a racist (the cap dir. is black). However, they didn't succeed. Things were so messed up that I shouldn't go down

ESEA Adv. Com.
Maj. of Blacks after recog. they had won't until after they go back. That should be with to weeks at the most. The organization project in Duplin county involves one identifiable section of the county and is built aroud the issue of drainage. The guy working there is also a VISTA, probably having had some ACT trianing but I'm not sure. The man to contact is Lawrence Bush/Vista Supervisor/Community Action Council, in P. O. Drawer 608/ Rose Hill, N. C. 28458/919-28903151. The CAP dir. is M. G. Gording.

Recreation and the city's budget for it may be another issue besides those of educ. and housing on which ACT will begins to challenge the basic structure of city gov't. They are going to ask for a direct part in the decision making process--challenging the myth that the city council members represent all the people. If you believe that just look at the streets and gargage collection and parks. Its bad in the poor sections of town and good in the more wealthy. This is just a smaller picture of the entire society. The system is rigid and undemocratic. I think he said something about the basic powerlessness of the middle class people in our society too.

He doesn't know if they will ever have enough power to change the nature of the gov't without threatening a riot in Durham. Really doesn't know how this will work out. Not overly whopeful (I'm not very sure of any of the points I make in this paragraph. He didn't make his feelings perfectly clear.)

-He doesn't think that Zellner's approach will work. He he wasn't such a talented man it wouldn't have gone as far as it has. He doesn't think you can organize white and black together. Besides the radial hang ups of whites, the two groups have different needs as far as developing consciousness and pride goes. The blacks needs to develop its identity vis a vis the white so basically and the poor white vis a vis the middle class culture and these development ~~whit~~ will involve different trusts which will work for conflict. He thinks that coalitions rather than integration is the way to operate. He is up for as much integration as possible and there will be integration at the leadership levels, but it is unrealistic to do it at the lower levels. There are so many things that can kill an organization project after its already together that it is really foolish to try to combine the two groups and bring up these new problems before you get together. You can easily over-reach yourself early.

-EPO has a $100,000 budget. It has a total of 15 permanent staff members of which 7 are local people. Has 15 summer staff members of which 9 are local. They are in the process of getting a VISTA proposal approved which will give them 20 spots to choose and administrate themselves.

The original EPO budget was approved jointly by the region office and Research and Development in Washington. Kelly want to Washington with his proposal. One of the things he took with him was an article by a person at Costal Progress Inc. that whites couldn't be organized (For this reason he doesn't think the co-op down there really helps to organize poor whites.). The man up there said that poor whites could be organized and called on a person from the Southeast Region and asked her to tell Kelly about the organizing. She said there wasn't any. After he got the approval from a forward looking man in R. and D. he used this approval to push the Region Staff. Even though they are successful- Kelly says it is the best program the Region has and maybe he meant OEO whit organizing anywhere and I got a lot a good reports on EPO when I was in Washington-- he says their budget is getting cut a little for next year. He says my problem is that I look at OEO rationally.

? Exp. in 11 org. — all to E.P.O. (

-ACT gets no money from EPO. Kelly sees two paths for it. One is to get money from OEO, but this puts too many ties on it. He thinks EPO should stay the OEO agency. OEO money with the restrictions on it is best operated with half middle class people. He wants for ACT to remain the poor people's group operated completely by them and using their money as they see fit. The other option and one that he thinks will allow this is getting foundation money. He disagrees with GROW on its view of foundation money. He thinks you can get a good bit of flexibality from it. Ford Foundation, as conservative as it is provided money for the N. C. Fund, which "did some beautiful stuff."

ACT helped to integrate the Edgemont Clinic. Before only blacks used it. Now both blacks and whites help run it and use it. It was begun as a project between the black group in the area and the N. C. Medical School.

-Boyte was a Duke student. He worked some with SNCC, he thinks. He was a good friend of Landerman and when he joined the staff he brought in Boyte from divinity school at Chicago. Most of the staff at one time were students at Duke. (Jay told me he was a student there and a good friend of Landerman's. He has been working since last July.) Schunior was a UNC student. Started hiring in the summer so they could pick up students when they first began.

-They have a theory for why they have more women active-- the issues they begin with are those which attract women --schools, kids, the neighborhood They believe though if you've got the wives and the kids, you can get the man when you need him. They are getting into issues now that will attract men such as housing. Several men spoke at the Council meeting. Also he felt that as they won more victories they would get more men in a successful project. A strike would bring in men. They would really like for there to be a strike. ACT would take it over. They would really have the resources for working with a strike, throwing out the union, and using it for an organizati(against union).

?

Thinking of tool. At present he would say the active membership was about 8-2 women.

-When they go into a community they do a lot of talking and listening to the people. They do not use church groups as bases of operation because this will sometimes involve you in some type of factional split in the community. It also alienates you from the bootlegger. You have to try to remain clear of these entanglements. They tell them they are from ACT. Most people have heard about that by now. He seems to think they are to a point of acceleration in terms of organization.
-Somewhat joking, someone said that Boyte was their Marxist and Landerman their anarchist.
-
-Staff meeting----------
Organizer-In Guthrie community they are haveing problems with the community organization.. There aren't any real problems and there isn't any feeling of community. It is naturally a very separate place. Kelly says that they may have started having meetings too soon before the basis for the organization had been established. Schunior said that she had probably been involved with an atypically successful neighborhood in the only other contact she had had with organization. The successful ones had had 12 members at the first meeting. None of the others had had over three or so. Her original complaint had been because no one had shown up at the last two meetings. Kelly said that maybe she should pull out of the community for a while and spend her time where it could be more fruitful. Schunior suggested that perhaps there could be contact kept with the community through a tutorial program or something of this nature. An organizer said that if you didn't get anything done, things just die out. Another organizer at a different point said that people aren't interested when nothing is happening. Schunior recognized a general pattern of ups and downs in terms of any community's involvement in the council meetings.
-One organizer said that she wanted an issue to really involve people rather than just get them to say they're involved and involve them fully. Kelly said that he had always been in line for electrifying issues, indicating that the process was long and difficult.
-Kelly told them about the need for getting a number of houses together in one group and when you got some destroyed, some boarded up, and some cleaned up, it "would look good." He talked about free tickets that had been given to ACT for a class A baseball game for the children and said it would be good to have them all go down together. It would be good publicity for the kids. Also, they would give tickets to the kids after they got to the ball park. That way they would be getting tickets because they were members of ACT. (He seems always to be talking in terms of employing any issue in the best way for community organization. From my point of view, he seems rather skillful about it.)

One organizer told about plans for co-operation between white and black councils in an area in order to get a stop light.

The people brought up the desirability of working with medical problems. Kelly said this was a really difficult area to work with and almost the only way to do it was by getting someone on the county or city medical board. If you don't you'll get lied to about the hospital not having enough personell, etc.

One of the local women who is an organizer told about her recent trip to the hospital; how they neglected her and took a doctor's wife instead of her at one point. This developed into a rather interesting conversation generally between the local women with their individual problems and experiences and Kelly and some of those who didn't appear to be local talking about the AMA and its restriction on the numbers of doctors, the reasons for the emphasis on curative rather than preventative medicine, the giving of free mededial care to doctors and their families, etc. Kelly said they might develop some "why shows" for medical problems (and other ones, I think) for council meetings when they had no pressing problems. They would talk about this at the entire staff meeting on Thursday.

-Kelly said that the two methods of organizing mentioned by Jay were not actually two separate methods. Both needed to be used or at least even if you had a local organizer you needed to do things. He said the woman that Jay said was good relly was super. If there were people like her in every block they would be out of business as organizers real quick.

-He has read Alinsky's material and thinks that it is sound stuff.

Jay- -ACT-Durham, N. C.-August 11, 1969

Recreation is a good thing to organize around in the community-- things for the kids work well. Only two neighborhoods have play grounds-one of them built recently. They have been looking around for other lots to build them on but haven't been able to find any more. Its a good organizational issue.

-The housing victory got a lot of people concinced that they could do something. When people like tham get up in a group like that people will listen to them.

-Landerman when he started work in 1966 in the Pattlock Park area organized on the basis of him being a good guy. He raked yards etc. so when a meeting was called the people went out to the meeting for good guy Dick. It was hard for Landerman to organize the community. He lost on the issue of a stop light. When he got the land for the park from Duke it really helped solidify the group. However, even then, only Mattlock and Harrington really helped to build it. Once it was finished it helped the community though and is a good symbol for others.

-About 6 out of the 12 councils have been organized this summer. ACT is getting a reputation and it is to the point of making organization much easier.

-In organizing you imediately start off with a handicap by coming in from the outside. He thinks there are two ways of organizing. The first is on the basis of victories. The second is through finding neighborhood leadership and developing it. A credible contact in the neighborhood helps emensely.

-In the Edgemont community they found a woman who was alreddy the accepted leader of the area and an instinctive radical. She organized that community in lightning speed.

When they organize the community they go door to door talking with the people telling them they are from ACT and listening to their problems. The communities are different but with many of the same problems. After a lot of listening they start the organization.

-About 75% of those active in ACT are women. They come from all ages. Reasons for more women are: 1) more time at home for meetings 2) men have to have a solidified position on various ideas since they deal more in the real world, women can afford to have different types of ideas 3) women are concerned about the community and children, the issues with which ACT organized 4) men are afraid to join because they might lose their job.

-Adm. dir--Kelly; field co-ordinator--Landerman; 2 community organizers--Boyte and Jay; community development assoc. and assistants-- the rest of the staff.

-Boyte worked in '66 in the Edgemont community.

-Jay says that ACT is one of the best organizing projects with whites in the nation. Besides Alinsky's efforts he can't think of any. JOIN isn't working any more.

May 11, 1970

Mr. Robert P. Mosteller
33 Cedar Court Apartments
North Greensboro Street
Carrboro, North Carolina 27510

Dear Bob:

I am sorry that you feel wronged. Technically speaking, of course, we have paid you for your study and your time and never guaranteed either the form of the fact of publication. I point this out not to be sticky about the matter, but to set the record straight. We feel, of course, that we got more than our money's worth!

The truth is Bob Anderson has expressed considerable interest in your work as I have. Both of us, in fact, feel that the whole area of poor white organizing and life syle are subjects that have not gotten enough attention and that your work is an important contribution to the subject. As you may recall, NEW SOUTH last year published two articles dealing with poor whites, and will carry in the present issue a shortened form of the study Harry Lefever did of church influences in Cabbagetown last year. At one point, I know, he also despaired of us.

I think I indicated before that any use of your material you wished make in connection with your academic work was alright We would not want someone, however, to pick it up for publication until we had made a final release of it. We will shortly make a determination of what form this will take.

I am sorry, again, if what to us seems due and attentive care has translated to you as indicative of indifference on our part, and I hope that you feel a little better toward us.

Sincerely,

Emory F. Via, Director
Resources Development Center

EFV/lb